NAVY HEADS WANT MORE OFFICERS AND SHIPS

HEARTENED BY SUPPORT OF COOLIDGE

MAGRUDER'S MAGAZINE ARTICLE SERVES AS RALLYING POINT

SECRETARY OF NAVY WILBUR CRITICIZES REAR ADMIRAL'S STATEMENTS

By HERBERT LITTLE
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Washington, Sept. 28.—Heartened by President Coolidge's support, navy leaders will ask congress for more officer material as well as more ships, it was said authoritatively today.

Rear Admiral T. P. Magruder's magazine attack on the sea service as "top heavy" seems likely to serve as a rallying-point to bring attention to all navy needs.

White House official comment that the navy's 35 admirals and 8,500 officer strength were not too much was received cheerfully in navy circles. Secretary of Navy Wilbur responded with a shot at one of Magruder's contentions that $4 was spent by navy yards for every $1 in work produced—and it was learned that other statements designed to show the inaccuracy of Magruder's criticism have been prepared.

Meantime it was indicated congress would be asked again to provide each member of congress with five naval academy appointments, instead of three, thus providing for more future officers. Congress voted three years ago to cut down its quota of this patronage from five to three, and consequently the 1928 graduating class and its successors will number less than 300, unless a change is voted.

This year's class of officers numbered more than 500. The full officer strength of the navy—5,499 line officers and 2,501 others, can just about be maintained with the present academy production, but no trained surplus is available as officers in time of war can be produced.

The present officer strength is enough for a navy of 132,000 men, although there are only about 80,000 enlisted men now, but both congress and the president have approved the maintenance of full officer strength as insurance, according to the White House.

In the Magruder-navy controversy itself, navy men believed the secretary scored a telling shot by drawing from the Philadelphia admiral the admission that he has no plan for reorganization of the navy.

Wilbur now refuses to say whether he contemplates further action, and likewise to discuss possibility of providing Magruder with assistants necessary to draft concrete recommendations for economy and "demobilization of navy shore establishments" advocated by Magruder in his Saturday Evening Post article.

Wilbur took another shot at Magruder in admitting he has before him now recommendations made in 1921 for decrease of the shore establishments. "We now have a smaller number of admirals on shore than was recommended by Magruder in this report," he said.

Whipple, it is charged, will fight extradition to Minnesota.

State "Big Three" Fired at From two Directions

COLD WAVE FORECAST FAILED TO APPEAR

Chicago, Sept. 28.—(UP)—The cold wave, forecast for the middle west yesterday but which failed to appear will arrive Wednesday in a modified form, government weather officials predict. Near freezing temperatures were being reported in sections of the northwest.

Government forecasts predicted warmer weather for the sections bound in the cold wave which descended from the Rocky mountain ranges of Canada and the United States.

STATE POLICE EXTEND SEARCH FOR BEACH

CHARGED WITH "AIDING AND ABETTING" MURDER OF DR. LILLIENDAHL

WHITE-HAIRED CHICKEN FANCIER DISAPPEARED YESTERDAY FROM HAMMONTON

Hammonton, N. J., Sept. 28.—(UP)—State police today extended the search for Willis "Hell-No" Beach to hunters shacks in the wasteland after his attorney, Edison Hedges, had assumed full responsibility for Beach's disappearance. Beach is charged with "aiding and abetting" the murder of Dr. William Lilliendahl.

The white-haired chicken fancier disappeared yesterday at a time when he stood a chance of being either cleared or indicted as driver of the blue coupe that whirled away from a patch of woodland at the time Dr. William Lilliendahl was shot to death. He is under $5,000 bond.

Beach's disappearance has made it embarrassing for Mrs. Margaret Lilliendahl, the widow, who is held in $25,000 bail as a material witness. She has maintained all along that her husband, the aged narcotics expert, was killed by two negroes and that Beach knew nothing about it.

A United Press correspondent called at the Lilliendahl home and was received by the 42-year-old widow. He found that she doesn't look her age.

She has a sharp, aristocratic nose, large, brown, intelligent eyes, and shows exquisite taste in dress.

Mrs. Lilliendahl discussed such things as the weather, the cat belonging to her 7-year-old son, and genelogy. She has been active in the New Jersey Daughters of the Revolution.

The elderly physician and his middle-aged wife had retired to their modest home from their establishment at Mountain Lakes, N. J. The change was made for his health.

The murdered physician was described as "a gentle soul" who had gunmen among his patients whom he tried to cure of the narcotic habit. He was slender, gentle-voiced, and delicate.

Beach is the opposite of the late Dr. Lilliendahl. He is short and robust and given to bucolic humor. The top of his head is bald and around it is a fringe of white hair.

The elderly physician and his wife started out from their bungalow in their car shortly before noon on September 15. On a swamp lane about 20 miles from Hammonton Dr. Lilliendahl was shot to death, and his wife sounded the alarm that two negroes had killed her husband.

It was learned this week that a blue coupe was parked in bushes not far from the scene of the murder at the time of the shooting, and that the car sped away about the time of the shooting.

Beach and Mrs. Lilliendahl had corresponded with each other. Beach addressed his letters to her as Peggy Anderson, under which name she received mail at the general delivery window of the postoffice here.

JUNK DEALER SHOT DOWN IN LABOR WAR

CHICAGO DEMANDS "SOMEONE PAY" FOR KILLING OF MAX BRAVERMAN

FOUR MEN ARE NOW UNDER INDICTMENT FOR THE CRIME

Chicago, Sept. 28.—(UP) — The Chicago press, civic organizations and officials today demanded that "someone pay" for the killing of Max Braverman, an obscure junk dealer shot down in a labor war, with far more unison and insistence than has resulted from the hundreds of murders which have made this city notorious throughout the world.

Braverman was killed several weeks ago and four men are under indictment for the crime. Seeming lack of diligence of police in immediately arresting Harry J. "Lefty" Lewis, charged with the actual shooting, at first roused editorial censure and adverse comment of civic leaders.

Then the bombing of the home of a deputy coroner who investigated the case caused further discussion.

But yesterday the home of Lewis Newman, a principal witness, was wrecked by a bomb and he and his family was endangered. Immediately a movement was started to hasten trial for Lewis and his alleged confederates. The following steps were taken:

All state witnesses in the case, more than a dozen, were urged by State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe to live under constant protection of the state, secluded in a hotel, until the trial was over.

Crowe announced he would move to have Lewis' trial advanced on the criminal calendar, although it will be reached normally next month.

The state's attorney said he would direct prosecution personally. He has appeared in court personally only in a very few of the most important cases in his office, notably the Leopold-Loeb trial.

The Chicago Tribune started a fund to be raised by public subscription for rebuilding Newman's home.

The Citizen Junk Peddlers' Protective Association announced all witnesses against Lewis, including Newman, would testify against the alleged killers of Max Braverman if they had to be carried to court.

The history of the case and the reason for the unprecedented interest of the city involves Lewis' efforts to organize a union of junk dealers and his alleged intimidation methods of gaining members.

Braverman and other dealers refused to join. They met last August 26 in a west side junk yard to discuss the situation.

Five automobile loads of gangsters, armed with revolvers and blackjacks appeared on the scene and charged the junk peddlers. Some of them were severely beaten. Braverman resisted and was shot to his death.

Witnesses, including Newman, said that Lewis fired the fatal shot. After the shooting, the hoodlums withdrew. Lewis and three other members of his gang were arrested and indicted several days later.

N. P. RY. SEEKS TO CURTAIL SERVICE TO BALD EAGLE

St. Paul, Sept. 28.—(UP)—Hearing will be held Oct. 10 by the railroad and warehouse commission on application of the Northern Pacific railroad to curtail service to Bald Eagle. The road seeks to cut off five trains now operating between St. Paul and Bald Eagle, because lack of patronage was resulting in decreased earnings.

The road also has petitioned to discontinue four mixed trains operating now between White Bear and Stillwater. This petition states that arrangements of schedules of other trains will give adequate service.

800 WHITE STUDENTS PROTEST ENTRY OF 24 NEGRO SCHOLARS

Gary, Ind., Sept. 28—(UP)—For the third consecutive day, more than 800 white students at Emerson high school here walked out on strike today in protest against admission of 24 negro students.

The third walk-out occurred following a mass meeting this morning at which strikers reiterated their demand that the negroes be transferred to other schools, and also demanded that all absences because of the strike be stricken from the records.

School officials, meanwhile, stood by their position that the negro students could not be transferred because of congested conditions in the city's schools. While they took no steps to force return of the strikers, they made it clear that work missed through absence caused by the strike would have to be made up.

As the strikers appeared to be backed by their parents in their demand for an "all-white" school, the situation seemed hopelessly deadlocked.

JOHN FORD, BROTHER OF HENRY, IS FOUND DEAD

BODY LAY IN VACANT HOUSE IN FORDSON, MICHIGAN

MEMBERS OF FAMILY BELIEVE HE SUFFERED A HEART ATTACK

Detroit, Mich., Sept. 28—(UP)—John Ford, 63, younger brother of Henry Ford, today was found dead of heart disease in a vacant house at Fordson, a suburban city named for the motor magnate.

After a night long search his body was found slumped across a bed in a little home he recently had purchased with the intention of reselling. The house was unoccupied.

Death apparently came within a few minutes after he had adjourned the Fordson city council, of which he was president and with which he had been connected since the city was a village.

While driving home he was seized with a heart attack, according to the theory advanced by his son. He stopped his machine near the vacant house, thinking he would recover after a little rest, the son believed.

Ford had been under medical care for some time and had been warned against undue exertion and excitement. Nevertheless, he carried on with both his private and civic business.

He is survived by a wife and three children. He was about 66 years old.

Ford's son Robert and three Fordson policemen found the body. Robert Ford said his father had been suffering from heart disease for some time.

Besides Robert, Ford's other two children are Clarence and Ethel.

John Ford always kept off the industrial scene where his brothers, Henry and William, made fortunes. His chief interest was in farming. He conducted the farm end of the real estate business of his firm, Castle & Ford, Inc. John H. Castle was his partner.

This year, his expert knowledge of agriculture was recognized by Governor Fred W. Green, who appointed him a member of the board of managers of the Michigan state fair.

POLITICAL SURVEY BY UNITED PRESS

NO REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE REPORTED CONTROLLING SITUATION

DEMOCRATS DISTRIBUTE FAVOR AMONG AL SMITH AND JIM REED

BY PAUL R. MALLON,
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Washington, Sept. 28—(UP)—Republicans and democrats of the central west are split a dozen ways over their prospective presidential candidates for 1928, a political survey by United Press bureaus indicates.

More republican candidates are seriously discussed in that district than there are states, and none is reported as controlling the situation. The division of opinion centers chiefly around former Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover, Charles Evans Hughes and Vice-President Charles G. Dawes, with party independents talking of supporting Senator George W. Norris (Rep., Neb.) there are also many favorite sons.

Democrats distribute their sentiment among Gov. Al Smith of New York, Senator James A. Reed, (Dem., Mo.,) and such local favorites as Gov. Vic Donahey of Ohio, Evans Woolen of Indiana, and others.

Never at this point in a pre-convention campaign has there been such divergence of opinion in both parties in this "breadbasket of America." The swing to any one of the candidates by the west before convention time may be the decisive action necessary for a nomination.

The situation in Ohio, "mother of presidents," is rather typical of the other states. Ohio republicans have Speaker Nicholas Longworth as a favorite son although he may not even obtain the delegation because dry leaders do not like his reported dampness. Hughes is said to have strong backing as against Hoover. Rep. Jim Begg of Sandusky is being discussed as a second favorite son. But the trend is nowhere definite.

The democratic situation is as unsettled. Gov. Donahey, a favorite son, may receive the delegation if he asks for it. Although former Secretary of War Newton Baker is looked upon as a possible successor to the nation-wide McAdoo strength. Senator Pomerene dropped out of the discussion after his senatorial defeat, and little boosting is heard for Reed. Smith does not figure in the picture, leaders say.

In Indiana, democrats under Thos. Taggart are centering on Woolen, Indianapolis baker, ad steering away from the Smith and Reed movements. Republicans are too involved in state politics just now to think about a presidential race, although it is said Senator Jim Reed will not seek the delegation as had been expected.

Illinois has two republican favorite sons—Lowden and Dawes. They are close personal friends, and reports indicate Lowden may obtain most of the delegates, which later in the convention may go to Dawes if Lowden fails. George Brennan, democratic leader, is keeping quiet but it is known he is prepared to bring a major portion of his state delegation to the next convention pledged to Smith. Downstate democrats are expected to give their votes to a dry.

Gov. Fred W. Green, (Rep., Mich.) says he personally favors a delegation pledged to Hoover if Mr. Coolidge is definitely out of the race.

"I believe the president meant just what he said, in his 'I do not choose' statement, but I also believe if a unanimous call for him comes he cannot refuse," Green said. "The only way he will run, I feel, will be through unanimous acclamation of his party."

Former Gov. Groesbeck leans toward Lowden while Chase Osborne, another Michigan leader, favors Will Hays, and William Alden Smith of Grand Rapids likes Dawes. The democratic sentiment is split likewise, with Senator Ferris favoring Donahey; William A. Comstock, national committeeman, leaning to Smith; and Horatio J. Abbott, state central committee chairman, looking for a midwestern candidate.

In Wisconsin and Nebraska independents are talking about Senator Norris, (Rep., Neb.) He probably will have the support of the strong LaFollette group but the "regulars" are eyeing Hoover and Lowden. Democrats of Wisconsin lean to Smith strongly while those in Nebraska are divided. Former Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska favors Smith first and Reed second, while former Governor Charles W. Bryan is opposed to any candidate who might seek to run on a wet ticket.

The organization republicans in Kansas probably will be for Senator Curtis, republican floor leader, as a favorite son, but considerable Lowden sentiment is reported in that state. The Reed organization has made some effort to get delegates among democrats there but Kansas has been considered inherently dry. In Missouri Reed is virtually assured the state delegation while republicans are divided between Lowden and Hoover, with Hughes and Dawes in the background.

Minnesota and North and South Dakota stand about the same, with considerable Lowden and Hoover sentiment in all three states and democrats split over the Smith movement. There is little talk of Hughes or Dawes.

Iowa republicans have been lining up delegates for Lowden as a favorite son, while democrats are talking of pledging to E. T. Meredith, farm editor and close friend of William G. McAdoo.

In the end these 12 states may swing the pendulum decisively for both parties. But just now their leaders are scratching heads perplexedly.

CONCRETE CHUNK HURLED INTO CAR KILLS DOCTOR

Chicago, Sept. 29.—(UP)—A piece of concrete weighing three pounds was hurled through a street car window by a passing train, killing Dr. K. E. Reichardt, 59, German physician.

Dr. Reichardt was riding in a car which runs along a railroad right-of-way when the accident occurred. Investigators said the concrete was left on the right-of-way by a construction gang and was hurled through the car window by a moving train.

EXPLOSION WRECKS MINE POWER PLANT

FIRST APPEARANCE OF SABOTAGE IN APPANOOSE COUNTY COAL FIELDS

Centerville, Iowa, Sept. 28—(UP)—Guards were doubled today at coal mines near Mystic, Iowa, and the number of deputy sheriffs on duty was increased following an explosion last night which wrecked the Winifred mine power plant.

It was the first appearance of sabotage in the Appanoose county coal fields since union miners went on strike April 1. Violence has been feared in the county for several months and Sheriff Earl Guaghenbaugh appealed to Governor Hammill for troops.

The governor refused to send guardsmen into the area, saying he believed the sheriff's force could handle the situation. Previously, relatively minor riots have occurred in various sections.

The explosion last night, caused by dynamite placed in the power house, destroyed three large transformers which supplied current to the Winifred mine. No one was injured.

Operators increased guards not only at the Winifred mine but at three other shafts in the vicinity and Gaughenbaugh sent a special force of armed deputies into the field.

LIVESTOCK BD. AND UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA

CONTEST POWER OF STATE DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE AND ADMINISTRATION

DICTATING WHO SHOULD BE NAMED TO BOARD, OR CONTROLLING "U" BUDGET

St. Paul, Sept. 28—(UP)—The "Big Three" of Minnesota's state government was fired at from two directions today.

A suit was filed in Ramsey county district court by the state Livestock Sanitary Board contesting the power of the "Big Three" or state department of finance and administration, to dictate who should be named to a position of inspector of the board.

At the same time the directors of the University of Minnesota decided to institute a friendly suit testing powers claimed by the same body to control the budget of the university.

Indication of a third blast against the board was in the offing. Commercial fishermen and others also are making plans to attack the finance commission, created by the 1925 legislature when the act was passed reorganizing the state government.

Governor Theodore Christianson, as an interim committee member of the legislature, helped frame the act, and after becoming governor was given most credit for forcing it through the legislature. It was looked on by his friends as the outstanding achievement of his administration.

More than a year ago a successful suit was carried through the courts by the state railroad and warehouse commission when the "Big Three" undertook to reduce salaries of commission employes before a classification of those working in state offices had been made.

The university's suit will be filed soon in either Ramsey county or Hennepin county district court. It will propose to settle the question of whom has authority to govern the expenditure of university funds. The "Big Three's" refusal to approve a faculty insurance item in the university budget, started a difference of opinion.

A resolution unanimously adopted today by the regents of the university provided for filing of the suit. It is claimed the charter of the university gives those in charge of the institution the right to administer the budget independent of the "Big Three."

The budget always has been handled by the university in the past. After the reorganization act was passed, Dean Everett Fraser, university law college, prepared a brief contesting claims of the "Big Three" to interfere in budget affairs of the institution. Nothing more was done, however, until the faculty insurance was risapproved.

Sentenced to Prison on Charges of Using Mails to Defraud

Minneapolis, Sept. 28.—(UP)—For the next 18 months, postal inspectors will be able to keep track of George A. Fritz and his partner, Leo Louis Bonness, known to federal operatives as the "phantom housekeepers."

Fritz and Bonness were sentenced to 18 months each in the federal penitentiary on charges of using the mails to defraud. The men were charged with writing letters in reply to advertisements for housekeepers, and then obtaining funds from the advertisers in advance while they posed as female applicants.

Ford had been under medical care for some time and had been warned against undue exertion and excitement. Nevertheless, he carried on with both his private and civic business.

He is survived by a wife and three children. He was about 66 years old.

Ford's son Robert and three Fordson policemen found the body. Robert Ford said his father had been suffering from heart disease for some time.

Besides Robert, Ford's other two children are Clarence and Ethel.

John Ford always kept off the industrial scene where his brothers, Henry and William, made fortunes. His chief interest was in farming. He conducted the farm end of the real estate business of his firm, Castle & Ford, Inc. John H. Castle was his partner.

This year, his expert knowledge of agriculture was recognized by Governor Fred W. Green, who appointed him a member of the board of managers of the Michigan state fair.

POLITICAL SURVEY BY UNITED PRESS

NO REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE REPORTED CONTROLLING SITUATION

BY PAUL R. MALLON,
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

Washington, Sept. 28—(UP)—Republicans and democrats of the central west are split a dozen ways over their prospective presidential candidates for 1928, a political survey by United Press bureaus indicates.

More republican candidates are seriously discussed in that district than there are states, and none is reported as controlling the situation. The division of opinion centers chiefly around former Governor Frank O. Lowden of Illinois, Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover, Charles Evans Hughes and Vice-President Charles G. Dawes, with party independents talking of supporting Senator George W. Norris (Rep., Neb.) there are also many favorite sons.

Democrats distribute their sentiment among Gov. Al Smith of New York, Senator James A. Reed, (Dem., Mo.,) and such local favorites as Gov. Vic Donahey of Ohio, Evans Woolen of Indiana, and others.

Never at this point in a pre-convention campaign has there been such divergence of opinion in both parties in this "breadbasket of America." The swing to any one of the candidates by the west before convention time may be the decisive action necessary for a nomination.

The situation in Ohio, "mother of presidents," is rather typical of the other states. Ohio republicans have Speaker Nicholas Longworth as a favorite son although he may not even obtain the delegation because dry leaders do not like his reported dampness. Hughes is said to have strong backing as against Hoover. Rep. Jim Begg of Sandusky is being discussed as a second favorite son. But the trend is nowhere definite.

The democratic situation is as unsettled. Gov. Donahey, a favorite son, may receive the delegation if he asks for it. Although former Secretary of War Newton Baker is looked upon as a possible successor to the nation-wide McAdoo strength. Senator Pomerene dropped out of the discussion after his senatorial defeat, and little boosting is heard for Reed. Smith does not figure in the picture, leaders say.

In Indiana, democrats under Thos. Taggart are centering on Woolen, Indianapolis baker, ad steering away from the Smith and Reed movements. Republicans are too involved in state politics just now to think about a presidential race, although it is said Senator Jim Reed will not seek the delegation as had been expected.

Illinois has two republican favorite sons—Lowden and Dawes. They are close personal friends, and reports indicate Lowden may obtain most of the delegates, which later in the convention may go to Dawes if Lowden fails. George Brennan, democratic leader, is keeping quiet but it is known he is prepared to bring a major portion of his state delegation to the next convention pledged to Smith. Downstate democrats are expected to give their votes to a dry.

Gov. Fred W. Green, (Rep., Mich.) says he personally favors a delegation pledged to Hoover if Mr. Coolidge is definitely out of the race.

"I believe the president meant just what he said, in his 'I do not choose' statement, but I also believe if a unanimous call for him comes he cannot refuse," Green said. "The only way he will run, I feel, will be through unanimous acclamation of his party."

Former Gov. Groesbeck leans toward Lowden while Chase Osborne, another Michigan leader, favors Will Hays, and William Alden Smith of Grand Rapids likes Dawes. The democratic sentiment is split likewise, with Senator Ferris favoring Donahey; William A. Comstock, national committeeman, leaning to Smith; and Horatio J. Abbott, state central committee chairman, looking for a midwestern candidate.

In Wisconsin and Nebraska independents are talking about Senator Norris, (Rep., Neb.) He probably will have the support of the strong LaFollette group but the "regulars" are eyeing Hoover and Lowden. Democrats of Wisconsin lean to Smith strongly while those in Nebraska are divided. Former Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska favors Smith first and Reed second, while former Governor Charles W. Bryan is opposed to any candidate who might seek to run on a wet ticket.

The organization republicans in Kansas probably will be for Senator Curtis, republican floor leader, as a favorite son, but considerable Lowden sentiment is reported in that state. The Reed organization has made some effort to get delegates among democrats there but Kansas has been considered inherently dry. In Missouri Reed is virtually assured the state delegation while republicans are divided between Lowden and Hoover, with Hughes and Dawes in the background.

Minnesota and North and South Dakota stand about the same, with considerable Lowden and Hoover sentiment in all three states and democrats split over the Smith movement. There is little talk of Hughes or Dawes.

Iowa republicans have been lining up delegates for Lowden as a favorite son, while democrats are talking of pledging to E. T. Meredith, farm editor and close friend of William G. McAdoo.

In the end these 12 states may swing the pendulum decisively for both parties. But just now their leaders are scratching heads perplexedly.

EXPLOSION WRECKS MINE POWER PLANT

FIRST APPEARANCE OF SABOTAGE IN APPANOOSE COUNTY COAL FIELDS

Centerville, Iowa, Sept. 28—(UP)—Guards were doubled today at coal mines near Mystic, Iowa, and the number of deputy sheriffs on duty was incresaed following an explosion last night which wrecked the Winifred mine power plant.

It was the first appearance of sabotage in the Appanoose county coal fields since union miners went on strike April 1. Violence has been feared in the county for several months and Sheriff Earl Guaghenbaugh appealed to Governor Hammill for troops.

The governor refused to send guardsmen into the area, saying he believed the sheriff's force could handle the situation. Previously, relatively minor riots have occurred in various sections.

The explosion last night, caused by dynamite placed in the power house, destroyed three large transformers which supplied current to the Winifred mine. No one was injured.

Operators increased guards not only at the Winifred mine but at three other shafts in the vicinity and Gaughenbaugh sent a special force of armed deputies into the field.

LIVESTOCK BD. AND UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA

CONTEST POWER OF STATE DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE AND ADMINISTRATION

DICTATING WHO SHOULD BE NAMED TO BOARD, OR CONTROLLING "U" BUDGET

St. Paul, Sept. 28—(UP)—The "Big Three" of Minnesota's state government was fired at from two directions today.

A suit was filed in Ramsey county district court by the state Livestock Sanitary Board contesting the power of the "Big Three" or state department of finance and administration, to dictate who should be named to a position of inspector of the board.

At the same time the directors of the University of Minnesota decided to institute a friendly suit testing powers claimed by the same body to control the budget of the university.

Indication of a third blast against the board was in the offing. Commercial fishermen and others also are making plans to attack the finance commission, created by the 1925 legislature when the act was passed reorganizing the state government.

Governor Theodore Christianson, as an interim committee member of the legislature, helped frame the act, and after becoming governor was given most credit for forcing it through the legislature. It was looked on by his friends as the outstanding achievement of his administration.

More than a year ago a successful suit was carried through the courts by the state railroad and warehouse commission when the "Big Three" undertook to reduce salaries of commission employes before a classification of those working in state offices had been made.

The university's suit will be filed soon in either Ramsey county or Hennepin county district court. It will propose to settle the question of whom has authority to govern the expenditure of university funds. The "Big Three's" refusal to approve a faculty insurance item in the university budget, started a difference of opinion.

A resolution unanimously adopted today by the regents of the university provided for filing of the suit. It is claimed the charter of the university gives those in charge of the institution the right to administer the budget independent of the "Big Three."

The budget always has been handled by the university in the past. After the reorganization act was passed, Dean Everett Fraser, university law college, prepared a brief contesting claims of the "Big Three" to interfere in budget affairs of the institution. Nothing more was done, however, until the faculty insurance was risapproved.

Minneapolis, Sept. 28.—(UP)—For the next 18 months, postal inspectors will be able to keep track of George A. Fritz and his partner, Leo Louis Bonness, known to federal operatives as the "phantom housekeepers."

Fritz and Bonness were sentenced to 18 months each in the federal penitentiary on charges of using the mails to defraud. The men were charged with writing letters in reply to advertisements for housekeepers, and then obtaining funds from the advertisers in advauce while they posed as female applicants.

HULTMAN CONCERT ENJOYABLE EVENT

Songs and Music by Rev. J. A. Hultman Were Impressive and Well Rendered

PAUL HULTMAN AN ARTIST

Program Given Under Auspices of Swedish Bethany Church Monday Evening

Those who had the good fortune to attend the concert Monday evening at the Swedish Baptist church were given a rare musical treat by the Rev. J. A. Hultman and his son Prof. Paul Hultman.

Rev. Mr. Hultman in a very pleasing and entertaining manner rendered several groups of his "Sunshine" songs. He plays his own accompaniments, on piano or organ, in a way that appears to bring out his very soul in his music. The singer was able to carry his audience into deep, solemn thought and again into thought that would bring sunshine and pleasure to the heart. The songs were mostly of his own composition and he would at times alternate the verses between Swedish and American languages. At other times he would sing a verse in Swedish with organ accompaniment and then in American with piano accompaniment. Between songs the musician would relate humorous incidents in his concert work in Europe and America during the past 50 years. He told of a concert in Nebraska at a church where it was unusual to have an admission charge. When a lady was asked for her ticket at the door she replied, "Why, I supposed they were only taking collection tonight so I left my money at home."

The first time Rev. Hultman visited Minnesota was 48 years ago and his first visit to Brainerd was about 18 years ago. During his last tour of Sweden he gave over 3,200 concerts, at one time running 576 days without a rest, many days giving three concerts. A large number of these were given at meetings of laboring men and for the unemployed, the offerings taken amounting to over $30,000, all of which was given toward the relief of worthy laborers and their families.

Prof. Paul Hultman played with a rare touch and precision which is so necessary to give the audience the full musical value of the various compositions. Mr. Hultman's reading of "Romance" from Sibelius was played with the true delicate touch and fineness which brought out the dreamy vision of the lovers. His interpretation of the stormy "Polonaise in E" was a direct contrast and showed his remarkable ability and understanding of expression. The numbers given were as follows:

Prelude	Rachmaninoff
Liebestraum	Liszt
Etude	Rubenstein
Romance	Sibelius
Puck	Grieg
Rhapsody	Liszt
Country Gardens	Grainger
Fantasy	Smith
Polonaise in E	Liszt

Mr. Hultman is also the possessor of a very good voice and favored the audience with two Swedish songs. During the singing of "A Prayer Mother" the audience was moved to tears by the feeling and expression put into the song. In a short talk the musician left with the young folks, as a parting thought the message as expressed by St. Matthew, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see the kingdom of heaven."

The concert was given in a very free and pleasing manner, both artists taking every freedom in selecting their numbers with no definite program to follow. It was given under the auspices of the Swedish Bethany church.

Prof. Hultman is president of the Hultman Conservatory of Music, Chicago, having a staff of 20 teachers.

Water and Light Board Purchases Three Quarters of a Mile of Cast Iron Pipe

1300 FEET ON GROUND

Extension of Water Main System This Year Costs Between $18,00 and $20,000

The Water and Light Board at their meeting last evening ordered an additional three quarters of a mile of pipe for the laying of the water main in Northeast Brainerd. The pipe ordered is the "Mono Cast Iron" of six and eight inches dimensions to be laid on Sixth, Seventh and Washington avenues in Northeast Brainerd.

The line is already completed from Fourth avenue to Mill avenue on Ash avenue. It is the intention to lay pipe until the weather makes it impossible to continue this year. The new pipe is expected in Brainerd within ten days. At the present time there are 1,300 feet of pipe still on the ground waiting to be laid. It is the intention to lay out to 11th avenue on Ash avenue then running oe block south on 11th, then east to 9th avenue.

The pipe laying this year will cost between $18,00 and $20,000 and represents the laying of about two miles of new pipe, extending the water main system of Brainerd to the new territory in Northeast Brainerd.

The board accepted the work on the water tank on Sixth street on the recommendation of the consulting engineer, L. P. Wolfe of St. Paul. The work of relining the tank and putting it in first class condition was done by M. Charlebois of South St. Paul.

Finds "Cheap" Ring; Its Value Is $6,000

Salem, Mass.—At a dance in the Hawthorne hotel, Miss Jeannette Brooks of Peabody, found what she supposed to be a cheap and gaudy ring. She wore it, much to the amusement of her friends, who thought it was worth about a dime. Later Mrs. E. C. Edwards of Toledo, Ohio, identified the ring as one which she lost. It is an emerald valued at $6,000.

Miss Brooks said she read of the loss in a newspaper and gave the ring to the police, who telephoned to Boston and the owner came here. Miss Brooks received a reward of $500 from Mrs. Edwards.

HULTMAN CONCERT ENJOYABLE EVENT

Songs and Music by Rev. J. A. Hultman Were Impressive and Well Rendered

PAUL HULTMAN AN ARTIST

Program Given Under Auspices of Swedish Bethany Church Monday Evening

Those who had the good fortune to attend the concert Monday evening at the Swedish Baptist church were given a rare musical treat by the Rev. J. A. Hultman and his son Prof. Paul Hultman.

Rev. Mr. Hultman in a very pleasing and entertaining manner rendered several groups of his "Sunshine" songs. He plays his own accompaniments, on piano or organ, in a way that appears to bring out his very soul in his music. The singer was able to carry his audience into deep, solemn thought and again into thought that would bring sunshine and pleasure to the heart. The songs were mostly of his own composition and he would at times alternate the verses between Swedish and American languages. At other times he would sing a verse in Swedish with organ accompaniment and then in American with piano accompaniment. Between songs the musician would relate humorous incidents in his concert work in Europe and America during the past 50 years. He told of a concert in Nebraska at a church where it was unusual to have an admission charge. When a lady was asked for her ticket at the door she replied, "Why, I supposed they were only taking collection tonight so I left my money at home."

The first time Rev. Hultman visited Minnesota was 48 years ago and his first visit to Brainerd was about 18 years ago. During his last tour of Sweden he gave over 3,200 concerts, at one time running 576 days without a rest, many days giving three concerts. A large number of these were given at meetings of laboring men and for the unemployed, the offerings taken amounting to over $30,000, all of which was given toward the relief of worthy laborers and their families.

Prof. Paul Hultman played with a rare touch and precision which is so necessary to give the audience the full musical value of the various compositions. Mr. Hultman's reading of "Romance" from Sibelius was played with the true delicate touch and fineness which brought out the dreamy vision of the lovers. His interpretation of the stormy "Polonaise in E" was a direct contrast and showed his remarkable ability and understanding of expression. The numbers given were as follows:

Prelude	Rachmaninoff
Liebestraum	Liszt
Etude	Rubenstein
Romance	Sibelius
Puck	Grieg
Rhapsody	Liszt
Country Gardens	Grainger
Fantasy	Smith
Polonaise in E	Liszt

Mr. Hultman is also the possessor of a very good voice and favored the audience with two Swedish songs. During the singing of "A Prayer Mother" the audience was moved to tears by the feeling and expression put into the song. In a short talk the musician left with the young folks, as a parting thought the message as expressed by St. Matthew, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see the kingdom of heaven."

The concert was given in a very free and pleasing manner, both artists taking every freedom in selecting their numbers with no definite program to follow. It was given under the auspices of the Swedish Bethany church.

DISCOVERED BY OPERATIVES OF DETECTIVE AGENCY WHO GOT TIP WHERE HE WAS

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 28.—(UP)—Richard J. Reynolds, 21, president of the Reynolds Airways Company of New York and heir to the Reynolds tobacco millions, who had been missing for 12 days, was found here last night "enjoying a vacation."

He was discovered by operatives of a detective agency after they promised to pay an unknown man $3,000 for information concerning his whereabouts. The informer and a girl were with Reynolds when he was found at a restaurant.

The young millionaire said he left New York, Sept. 17, attended the Dempsey-Tunney fight in Chicago and then came to St. Louis to attend the horse races at Fairmount track. He said he was unaware until yesterday of the furore created by his disappearance.

Reynolds denied his identity when first approached by detectives but later admitted who he was, promising that he would return to New York this morning. He had been using the names John S. Graham and J. K. Fleet.

Asked why he used an assumed name, Reynolds said he "did not wish to be disturbed."

Captain Manville Davis had been told where he was going before he left New York, Reynolds told detectives. He said he left New York with $700 and had been "living off the races" since he arrived in St. Louis.

C. C. Ruston, manager of the detective agency retained by the Reynolds family to hunt for the missing youth, received a telephone call early yesterday evening from a man who said he knew where Reynolds could be found and would supply the information for $3,000.

Later he called again and was assured that he would receive the amount demanded if Reynolds was found on the strength of his "tip." He then told the booth where Reynolds was sitting in a downtown restaurant.

Detectives drove to the restaurant and approached the booth to which they had been directed. Ruston asked the young man answering descriptions of Reynolds if that was his name. Reynolds answered in the negative, producing a driver's license issued to John S. Graham as proof.

John S. Graham is a business associate of young Reynolds who lives in Winston-Salem, N. C.

After brief questioning by Ruston, Reynolds admitted his identity explaining that "this is getting on my nerves." He displayed a fountain pen with his name engraved on it.

The woman who had been with Reynolds disappeared during the questioning. Detectives said she was pretty and about 25 years old. The other man left accompanied by detectives.

Reynolds said his man companion was a race track man whom he had met here. He was understood to be the man who had supplied the $3,000 information. The sum was not paid by detectives pending further investigation.

It was learned Reynolds had been living at the Claridge hotel, registered as J. K. Fleet. He had checked out early last evening, however, and took detectives to another downtown hotel.

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 28.—(UP)—The life of a multi-millionaire is not all it is sometimes represented. Take, for example the lot of Richard J. Reynolds, heir to the Reynolds tobacco fortune, who can't enjoy undisturbed even the two weeks vacation allowed any $25 a week clerk.

Reynold's attempt to "get away" was rudely frustrated here last night by private detectives hired to find him. Even his pose as a traveling salesman, backed up by a pocket full of black cigars and the jovial mein of a drummer failed to fool the sleuths.

The 200 pound, 21-year-old Reynolds will start back to New York and the "dull monotony" of a millionaire's existence today, his vacation cut short at the end of the 12th day.

Reynolds left New York and his identity behind on Sept. 17, first attending the Dempsey-Tunney fight in Chicago and then coming to St. Louis incognito for the races. As J. K. Fleet, salesman out for a good time, he enjoyed himself while the nation hunted Reynolds, the millionaire fearing "foul play."

"I just got fed up on society and night life along Broadway and decided to take a little trip as a sort of vacation," said Reynolds, tilting his slough hat far back on his head and hoisting his feet to the polished desk of the private detective who "captured" him.

"I can't understand what all the fuss is about. I left word with John Graham or Captain Manville Davis, I can't remember which, that I was going to Chicago to see the Dempsey-Tunney fight. I get a great kick out of making trips around the country on my own."

"After seeing Miss Marie Houston off for St. Louis I decided to go to Chicago by train. My chauffeur knows I go away often without telling the world about it. I don't understand about the car being found at Chicken Point. It must have been stolen and ditched out there.

"Right after the fight I heard about the dog racing down here and came to see it. I never saw dog races before. Pretty keen, aren't they? I registered at a hotel as Joy K. Fleet of Chicago. Funny thing, I saw a picture show in Chicago with that name in it and it was the first name that came to my mind.

"You know what I like to do once in a while," Reynolds confided, "is to go away and use another name so no one will bother me and pose as a travelling salesman in moderate priced hotels. Just to be one of the boys, natural like, and play around without worrying that someone is tring to get their hands on my money or capitalize my friendship.

"I met Eddie Crenshaw and he seemed to be a good fellow. He went to the races with me and I liked Ed. very much."

It was Crenshaw who divulged Reynold's whereabouts after he had been promised $3,000 for the service in a telephone conversation with detectives. Reynolds apparently did not resent his new found friend's informing activities and they went home together last night. Reynolds left detectives promising to be in New York in "a couple days." C. C. Ruston, manager of the agency which found Reynolds, said he was positive of the young man's identity, but declared he would withhold Crenshaw's reward pending "further investigation."

The girl with Reynolds and Crenshaw when detectives found them was later identified as Beulah Reins. She slipped away to her home last night when the operatives approached Reynolds.

POLICE HOLD TWO SUSPECTED OF BANK LOOTING

Lamar, Colo., Sept. 28.—(UP)—Police here today held two men suspected in connection with the looting of $4,200 from the Idalia, Colo., State bank yesterday, Sheriff L. E. Alderman announced.

PATRICK POWERS, LONG HUNTED, NOW IN CUSTODY

San Francisco, Sept. 28.—(UP)—Patrick Powers, hunted by postal inspectors throughout the country for several years as an alleged member of the bandit gang of Rev. Herbert Wilson, was in custody here today.

Picked up as a vagrant on a downtown street, Powers was turned over to postal inspectors who said he was wanted in Cincinnati in connection with the $100,000 mail robbery executed there by the Wilson gang three years ago.

The inspectors also attempted to connect him with a $500,000 mail robbery in Los Angeles in 1921 and with a $300,000 jewel robbery in New York both of which were attributed to Wilson's confederates.

SON SAYS NURSE KISSED HIS FATHER

Miss Atkinson, who has consistently denied her relations with the pastor, were other than a pastoral friendship, is charged with having administered poison to Mary Jane Bailey, the second mysterious death in the Bailey home in a period of two weeks.

The son, Stuart, who with the other Bailey children suffered a mysterious ailment following the death of their mother and presaging the death of their sister, told of several incidents in which the nurse demonstrated her affections for his father.

His testimony followed that of physicians who attended Mary Jane in her fatal illness and who declared the girl's death was not the result of disease but of "combined medication."

DISCOVERED BY OPERATIVES OF DETECTIVE AGENCY WHO GOT TIP WHERE HE WAS

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 28.—(UP)—Richard J. Reynolds, 21, president of the Reynolds Airways Company of New York and heir to the Reynolds tobacco millions, who had been missing for 12 days, was found here last night "enjoying a vacation."

He was discovered by operatives of a detective agency after they promised to pay an unknown man $3,000 for information concerning his whereabouts. The informer and a girl were with Reynolds when he was found at a restaurant.

The young millionaire said he left New York, Sept. 17, attended the Dempsey-Tunney fight in Chicago and then came to St. Louis to attend the horse races at Fairmount track. He said he was unaware until yesterday of the furore created by his disappearance.

Reynolds denied his identity when first approached by detectives but later admitted who he was, promising that he would return to New York this morning. He had been using the names John S. Graham and J. K. Fleet.

Asked why he used an assumed name, Reynolds said he "did not wish to be disturbed."

Captain Manville Davis had been told where he was going before he left New York, Reynolds told detectives. He said he left New York with $700 and had been "living off the races" since he arrived in St. Louis.

C. C. Ruston, manager of the detective agency retained by the Reynolds family to hunt for the missing youth, received a telephone call early yesterday evening from a man who said he knew where Reynolds could be found and would supply the information for $3,000.

Later he called again and was assured that he would receive the amount demanded if Reynolds was found on the strength of his "tip." He then told the booth where Reynolds was sitting in a downtown restaurant.

Detectives drove to the restaurant and approached the booth to which they had been directed. Ruston asked the young man answering descriptions of Reynolds if that was his name. Reynolds answered in the negative, producing a driver's license issued to John S. Graham as proof.

John S. Graham is a business associate of young Reynolds who lives in Winston-Salem, N. C.

After brief questioning by Ruston, Reynolds admitted his identity explaining that "this is getting on my nerves." He displayed a fountain pen with his name engraved on it.

The woman who had been with Reynolds disappeared during the questioning. Detectives said she was pretty and about 25 years old. The other man left accompanied by detectives.

Reynolds said his man companion was a race track man whom he had met here. He was understood to be the man who had supplied the $3,000 information. The sum was not paid by detectives pending further investigation.

It was learned Reynolds had been living at the Claridge hotel, registered as J. K. Fleet. He had checked out early last evening, however, and took detectives to another downtown hotel.

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 28.—(UP)—The life of a multi-millionaire is not all it is sometimes represented. Take, for example the lot of Richard J. Reynolds, heir to the Reynolds tobacco fortune, who can't enjoy undisturbed even the two weeks vacation allowed any $25 a week clerk.

Reynold's attempt to "get away" was rudely frustrated here last night by private detectives hired to find him. Even his pose as a traveling salesman, backed up by a pocket full of black cigars and the jovial mein of a drummer failed to fool the sleuths.

The 200 pound, 21-year-old Reynolds will start back to New York and the "dull monotony" of a millionaire's existence today, his vacation cut short at the end of the 12th day.

Reynolds left New York and his identity behind on Sept. 17, first attending the Dempsey-Tunney fight in Chicago and then coming to St. Louis incognito for the races. As J. K. Fleet, salesman out for a good time, he enjoyed himself while the nation hunted Reynolds, the millionaire fearing "foul play."

"I just got fed up on society and night life along Broadway and decided to take a little trip as a sort of vacation," said Reynolds, tilting his slough hat far back on his head and hoisting his feet to the polished desk of the private detective who "captured" him.

"I can't understand what all the fuss is about. I left word with John Graham or Captain Manvilie Davis, I can't remember which, that I was going to Chicago to see the Dempsey-Tunney fight. I get a great kick out of making trips around the country on my own."

"After seeing Miss Marie Houston off for St. Louis I decided to go to Chicago by train. My chauffeur knows I go away often without telling the world about it. I don't understand about the car being found at Chicken Point. It must have been stolen and ditched out there.

"Right after the fight I heard about the dog racing down here and came to see it. I never saw dog races before. Pretty keen, aren't they? I registered at a hotel as Joy K. Fleet of Chicago. Funny thing, I saw a picture show in Chicago with that name in it and it was the first name that came to my mind.

"You know what I like to do once in a while," Reynolds confided, "is to go away and use another name so no one will bother me and pose as a travelling salesman in moderate priced hotels. Just to be one of the boys, natural like, and play around without worrying that someone is tring to get their hands on my money or capitalize my friendship.

"I met Eddie Crenshaw and he seemed to be a good fellow. He went to the races with me and I liked Ed. very much."

It was Crenshaw who divulged Reynold's whereabouts after he had been promised $3,000 for the service in a telephone conversation with detectives. Reynolds apparently did not resent his new found friend's informing activities and they went home together last night. Reynolds left detectives promising to be in New York in "a couple days." C. C. Ruston, manager of the agency which found Reynolds, said he was positive of the young man's identity, but declared he would withhold Crenshaw's reward pending "further investigation."

The girl with Reynolds and Crenshaw when detectives found them was later identified as Beulah Reins. She slipped away to her home last night when the operatives approached Reynolds.

POLICE HOLD TWO SUSPECTED OF BANK LOOTING

Lamar, Colo., Sept. 28.—(UP)—Police here today held two men suspected in connection with the looting of $4,200 from the Idalia, Colo., State bank yesterday, Sheriff L. E. Alderman announced.

PATRICK POWERS, LONG HUNTED, NOW IN CUSTODY

San Francisco, Sept. 28.—(UP)—Patrick Powers, hunted by postal inspectors throughout the country for several years as an alleged member of the bandit gang of Rev. Herbert Wilson, was in custody here today.

Picked up as a vagrant on a downtown street, Powers was turned over to postal inspectors who said he was wanted in Cincinnati in connection with the $100,000 mail robbery executed there by the Wilson gang three years ago.

The inspectors also attempted to connect him with a $500,000 mail robbery in Los Angeles in 1921 and with a $300,000 jewel robbery in New York both of which were attributed to Wilson's confederates.

SON SAYS NURSE KISSED HIS FATHER

Miss Atkinson, who has consistently denied her relations with the pastor, were other than a pastoral friendship, is charged with having administered poison to Mary Jane Bailey, the second mysterious death in the Bailey home in a period of two weeks.

The son, Stuart, who with the other Bailey children suffered a mysterious ailment following the death of their mother and presaging the death of their sister, told of several incidents in which the nurse demonstrated her affections for his father.

His testimony followed that of physicians who attended Mary Jane in her fatal illness and who declared the girl's death was not the result of disease but of "combined medication."

LEIF ERICSON

NORWEGIANS of Minneapolis on Monday evening paid honors to Leif Ericson, first European to set foot on American soil and preceding Columbus by some 500 years. As near as we can see it, Columbus was the better press agent in heralding his discovery and has thus cast in the shade the commendable exploration work done by the Norseman.

One of the notable speakers at the Minneapolis celebration was Professor Rasmus B. Anderson of Madison, Wis., renowned as a student of Norwegian history and literature.

As reported in the Minneapolis Tribune, covering the address of the learned professor, historical data tended to establish the fact that Leif Ericson's voyage, while it did not of itself result in the permanent colonization of America, it was nevertheless of immense value to the world because knowledge of his voyage gave to Columbus the inspiration necessary to embark on his voyage of 1492.

"We find considerable evidence in the case, but it is all circumstantial evidence," Professor Anderson stated. "The sum of the evidence, however, gives us an excellent case.

"The first bit of evidence relates to Gudrid, sister-in-law to Leif Ericson. She was married to Thorsten, brother of Leif, but her husband died en route to Vinland, as America was called by the Vikings. She put about for Greenland and lived there for three years, at which time she was married to Thorfin, who came from Iceland. After her marriage she persuaded her husband to go to Vinland.

"The party made the trip in three vessels, with 160 men, several women, and their chattels. The colony lived in Vinland for three years, and a son, Snorre Thorfinnson was born to Gudrid in the new country.

"Three years later the party broke up the settlement and moved to Iceland, where her husband later died. After his death Gudrid made a visit to Rome, where she related many accounts of the far-away Vinland.

"Then we have the work of Adam of Bremen, a learned man of the eleventh century who made a thorough investigation of those journeys and published his findings, which in turn were studied in the European centers. I have three copies of this book in my own library. The third important piece of evidence is the biography of Columbus, written by his son Ferdinand, who stated that Columbus made a trip to the Scandinavian countries and Iceland in 1477, when he investigated the reports and records of the trips to Vinland, the last one of which was made about 140 years earlier.

"There is also evidence to show that a special bishopric was created for Greenland and another country beyond."

SECRETARY HOOVER'S STATEMENT

WE are glad to read the comprehensive and incisive statement of Secretary of Commerce Hoover. He believes that the development of a great inland waterway system will aid the farmer and midwest industry.

So far we had heard waterways encouraged mainly to assist the farmer in his dilemma, who must compete with the cheap freight rate and cheap production of the Argentinian and Australian farmers.

Now it appears that the manufacturer of the middle west also feels the shoe pinching. He is compelled to compete with coastal manufacturers who get their raw material cheaply and ship the manufactured products cheaply. As a consequence, there is a movement of midwest manufacturing interests to either coast, establishing themselves where there is greater freedom in competition.

Mr. Hoover's statement as published in the Brainerd Dispatch today is worthy of deep study and consideration. The man is no theorist. As an engineer and statesman he has demonstrated his ability time and again. His work in European relief, in the recent flood relief and less spectacularly, his work as head of the Department of Commerce has stamped him as a thinking and most capable man.

As a mining engineer he had established a worldwide reputation before he entered the government cabinet. In fact he was better known in Europe than his own United States.

We are glad to see a man like Hoover take an interest in the transportation problems and the economic features of the middle west, an inland empire that needs the same freedom of ingress and egress as the east and west and south coasts now so freely enjoy.

THE COMMON-SENSE CURE

KNOWLEDGE multiplies apace, says the St. Cloud Daily Times, but wisdom is still elusive. Nowhere is this truer or clearer than in matters of cure, whether it be of social or economic or physical infirmities. Concerning all these we know infinitely more today than yesterday, and yet must still confess disappointment, since no clear path is opened out of an increasing confusion. The panacea is still a myth, the final authority still lacking, and common agreement on experience has brought with it the widest differences in theory and practice.

One cause for this is that the world is now no less credulous, even though it be vastly better informed. So many things are now possible that we believe all things possible and will run as eagerly after an attractive delusion as ever in the days of superstition. For this reason there is no remedy so absurd but it will have a following, and the energies and enthusiasms of those who would better the world are divided into countless allegiances.

Therefore, in self-defense the average man must discount the optimism of those who preach new cures. Their story has been so often told and has so often lived briefly and surrendered quickly to an equally promising and delusive successor. New knowledge is vastly fertile of new theory, but convincing authority does not yet attend it. We take refuge in the middle ground of common sense from systems that are plausible in their presentation, too comprehensive in their claims and too fervent in their optimism to be trustworthy or true.

GREAT INLAND WATER SYSTEM AIDS FARMER

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE HERBERT HOOVER IN OFFICIAL STATEMENT

SAYS IT WILL ALSO ASSIST TO DEVELOP MIDWEST INDUSTRY

By CARL D. GROAT
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
(Copyright, 1927, by United Press)

Washington, Sept. 28.—Secretary of Commerce Hoover told the United Press yestesday development of a great inland waterway system would aid the farmer and midwest industry.

In an interview, the engineer-statesman outlined, as a basis for stable prosperity to farms and towns of the great central plain, his visioned—and partly accomplished—program for making the Mississippi and its tributaries a great pathway for commerce. Laden steel barges would ply through the Mississippi, linked up with inter-coastal canals, and improved Great Lakes navigation to the ocean via the St. Lawrence.

This development, he said, would "assist the American farmer, though it is not the whole of his problem." He foresaw also that it would check the movement of midwest factories toward the Atlantic seaboard — a presently unfavorable economic situation.

Rail rates, he pointed out, have of necessity swung upwards since the war. But, he declared, the proposed waterway chain would open new transportation avenues at rates comparable to the railroads' pre-war rates, and without damage to the railroads.

By completing the project, American farmers would be able to meet Argentinian and Australian competition at the great price determining markets at Liverpool and the Atlantic seaboard.

At present, Hoover said, American grain because of higher transportation rates than Argentina and Australia pay, is at a disadvantage of from eight to fifteen cents a bushel.

The costs of the project are comparatively small, and could be paid for with the savings in rates over a single year.

"The inland waterways problem," Hoover said, "is divided into four large segments or enterprises, namely:

"The Mississippi system which includes not only the Mississippi proper but also its tributaries.

"The Great Lakes.

"The Great Lakes to the sea.

"Intracoastal canals.

"The government has been working 50 to 100 years on our rivers but there has been in the situation a complete revolution in recent years. Waterway transportation has been shifted from the packet boat carrying 100 to 200 or 300 tons, with a draft of two or three feet to steel barges, carrying from 500 to 2,000 tons, requiring six to nine feet draft.

"Now the Mississippi system, if viewed broadly, becomes a series of trunk lines and a series of lateral lines, with the trunks running from New Orleans to Chicago, and through the lakes clear to Duluth—that is to say, from border to border of the country. Then by completing improvements on the Ohio and Missouri, we have an east and west trunk line stretching 1,600 to 1,700 miles. We have laterals off that, such as the Red river, upper Mississippi, Tennessee, Cumberland and Wabash, and the upper Mississippi to Minneapolis and St. Paul.

"Work on the Mississippi system has been done in segments hitherto. There is now a nine-foot draft at some points but in between there are still the old depths.

"This could be compared to the New York Central system if, with its regular line, it had sections of narrow gauge line in between. We must have a whole system; it can't be in portions. On actual mileage built, the new depths are about 75 per cent complete, but considered on the basis of connections between cities, they are only about 15 per cent complete. It is not a system yet—only a few disconnected segments. Hence it is impossible to get the steel barges put in operation as a transportation system."

Hoover pointed out, however, that the government barge line now operated from St. Louis to New Orleans is moving goods at approximately pre-war railroad rates.

"So it's not entirely a dream; we have a great saving, haven't we?" he interposed.

He then turned to the question of railroad rate increases which he described as acting as a sort of toligate to all goods going in and out of the west." The average low earnings of railroads as shown by the Interstate commerce commission preclude material reductions of rates, he felt.

"The rate increases," he continued "affect farmers materially. It has been calculated that the increases mean an increase of about 15 to 18 cents in the cost of shipping a bushel of wheat from South Dakota to Liverpool. Competition with American grain comes from Argentina and Australia which have about the same ocean rates as before the war with only little rail increase. This means, for instance, that Argentina has an advantage ranging from eight or nine cents a bushel to 15 cents a bushel over us.

"Now the price of wheat is made where the streams of competition come together, namely, Liverpool or the Atlantic seaboard. Therefore I conclude that the American farmer is getting an eight to 15 cents disadvantage, and this affects the price of all wheat, not simply the export faction.

"We estimate that the farmer would be able to get about pre-war transportation rates if he could get his goods out via the river and the St. Lawrence to the sea. This saving would repay all of the cost of the undertaking in a year if we calculate a lift in the price of grain to the farmer as the reflex of our increase in the export surplus."

Hoover then explained that the rate increases have reacted on the midwest manufacturer, causing him to pay more to get his raw materials in and his finished products out, and resulting in a tendency to hamper midwest industrial development since some of these industrialists are migrating to the seaboard. But its main effect is to stifle growth. This, in turn, reacts on the farmers' market, and there is a "distortion of the whole economic situation of the midwest."

"The only remedy," Hoover continued, "is construction of these waterways."

The St. Lawrence route, he pointed out, is the more direct route to northern Europe. Waterways construction, he said, would not injure the railways. With their business constantly increasing, they will face the problem of larger terminals and facilities, and of purchasing more equipment, but turning to waterways would be a simpler way of relieving the situation, Hoover feels. He pointed out that placing twenty millions of trucks and cars on improved highways had not destroyed the railroads.

Development of intracoastal canals such for instance as is being attempted across Louisiana and Texas to Houston, would further aid in lowering transportation costs, Hoover believes. As for the Great Lakes, he held that it is possible to stabilize their levels—which hitherto have been lowered by drainage and by climatic changes. Shallow channels and harbors increase lake transport costs.

As for the costs of development, Hoover estimated thus: Mississippi system, $120,000,000, for which congress has already begun making annual appropriations; St. Lawrence waterway (after deducting for water power sales) about $140,000,000 divided between Canada and the United States, and perhaps susceptible of further reduction by increasing water-power sales; intracoastal canals, a "couple of millions" a year; stabilization of the Great Lakes—probably about $5,000,000. And all of this would be spread over a period of six to twelve years as construction must move slowly.

"So while the development is of tremendous importance, it would not be a burden to the American taxpayer, and it does not interfere with programs for tax reduction," Hoover said, adding that congress has already authorized the Mississippi system, that intracoastal canals are under construction, and that the Great Lakes stabilization and St. Lawrence waterway development are the subject of negotiations with Canada.

ST. PAUL POLICE AIM TO SOLVE TEN MURDERS

LATTER CHARGES JAMES BARRETT WITH MURDERING TEN PERSONS

St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 28.—(UP)—Solution of ten murder mysteries was expected by police today as they continued questioning Arthur Hanson, confessed killer of James Barrett, who in turn is charged by Hanson with murdering five men and five women within the last eighteen months.

Hanson's story of Barrett's career as a bootlegger and gangster pictures him villain of a cold-blooded ferocity beyond the most fantastic imagination of the authors of "dime thrillers."

Barrett and Hanson engaged in an argument after the last of the maniacal shootings, according to Hanson, and both reached for their guns. The shooting occurred on a lonely road in the country. Barrett shot first but Hanson shot straighter and killed his adversary.

The murder over which the argument occured was killing of Barrett's wife and her sister, Lillian Kooser. Hanson was arrested in connection with the crime in Chicago and brought here. His confession followed.

He said he saw Barrett run from his home with his gun in his hand. They got into an automobile and Barrett told Hanson he had killed the women. The drive into the country and the duel followed.

"Barrett boasted to me that he had killed so many people he would need a private graveyard to bury them in," Hanson said.

Among the victims named by Hanson were two St. Paul policemen, John Schultz and Fred Peitsch in February, 1926. They were found in a suburb of the city, shot between the eyes.

Two other men and a woman were made victims of the killer because they "double crossed" him in a liquor deal and stole $16,000 worth of whiskey from Barrett's home, according to the informer. Those killed were Josephine Brunnell, Lester Wyman and William McManus.

Another gunman by the name of Jack Sullivan witnessed these killings, Hanson. Barrett lured him to a lonely spot and killed him also.

Finding of the bodies of Anne Grenville and Sadie Dubois murdered in their beds, was explained by Hanson as another crime of Barrett's, esigned to hide the triple murder previously related. Barrett believed the women were intimates of Sullivan and the latter had told them of the crime.

The killer kept a list, Hanson said, of men he planned to murder. They included underworld characters, bootleggers, politicians and gang leaders. The publisher of a weekly newspaper which had exposed crime conditions was also named.

200 Legionnaires Place Wreaths on the Tomb of Unknown Soldier

Rome, Sept. 28.—(UP)—Two hundred American Legionnaires today visited and placed wreaths of roses on the tomb of the unknown soldier.

United States Ambassador Fletcher, representatives of the Italian army and navy, and many Fascists were present at the ceremonies.

The Legionnaires arrived late yesterday from Pisa in two special trains. A large crowd welcomed them with shouts of "Long live America."

The Legionnaires were welcomed officially at the station by the prefect of the city, one of the vice governors of Rome, General Bazan of the Fascist militia, General Pizzari of the local garrison, Councilor Warren D. Robbins of the American embassy, the American military and naval attache, and a large number of army air officers.

Italian war veterans with banners and standards were also at the station to greet their war-time comrades.

LEIF ERICSON

NORWEGIANS of Minneapolis on Monday evening paid honors to Leif Ericson, first European to set foot on American soil and preceding Columbus by some 500 years. As near as we can see it, Columbus was the better press agent in heralding his discovery and has thus cast in the shade the commendable exploration work done by the Norseman.

One of the notable speakers at the Minneapolis celebration was Professor Rasmus B. Anderson of Madison, Wis., renowned as a student of Norwegian history and literature.

As reported in the Minneapolis Tribune, covering the address of the learned professor, historical data tended to establish the fact that Leif Ericson's voyage, while it did not of itself result in the permanent colonization of America, it was nevertheless of immense value to the world because knowledge of his voyage gave to Columbus the inspiration necessary to embark on his voyage of 1492.

"We find considerable evidence in the case, but it is all circumstantial evidence," Professor Anderson stated. "The sum of the evidence, however, gives us an excellent case.

"The first bit of evidence relates to Gudrid, sister-in-law to Leif Ericson. She was married to Thorsten, brother of Leif, but her husband died en route to Vinland, as America was called by the Vikings. She put about for Greenland and lived there for three years, at which time she was married to Thorfin, who came from Iceland. After her marriage she persuaded her husband to go to Vinland.

"The party made the trip in three vessels, with 160 men, several women, and their chattels. The colony lived in Vinland for three years, and a son, Snorre Thorfinnson was born to Gudrid in the new country.

"Three years later the party broke up the settlement and moved to Iceland, where her husband later died. After his death Gudrid made a visit to Rome, where she related many accounts of the far-away Vinland.

"Then we have the work of Adam of Bremen, a learned man of the eleventh century who made a thorough investigation of those journeys and published his findings, which in turn were studied in the European centers. I have three copies of this book in my own library. The third important piece of evidence is the biography of Columbus, written by his son Ferdinand, who stated that Columbus made a trip to the Scandinavian countries and Iceland in 1477, when he investigated the reports and records of the trips to Vinland, the last one of which was made about 140 years earlier.

"There is also evidence to show that a special bishopric was created for Greenland and another country beyond."

SECRETARY HOOVER'S STATEMENT

WE are glad to read the comprehensive and incisive statement of Secretary of Commerce Hoover. He believes that the development of a great inland waterway system will aid the farmer and midwest industry.

So far we had heard waterways encouraged mainly to assist the farmer in his dilemma, who must compete with the cheap freight rate and cheap production of the Argentinian and Australian farmers.

Now it appears that the manufacturer of the middle west also feels the shoe pinching. He is compelled to compete with coastal manufacturers who get their raw material cheaply and ship the manufactured products cheaply. As a consequence, there is a movement of midwest manufacturing interests to either coast, establishing themselves where there is greater freedom in competition.

Mr. Hoover's statement as published in the Brainerd Dispatch today is worthy of deep study and consideration. The man is no theorist. As an engineer and statesman he has demonstrated his ability time and again. His work in European relief, in the recent flood relief and less spectacularly, his work as head of the Department of Commerce has stamped him as a thinking and most capable man.

As a mining engineer he had established a worldwide reputation before he entered the government cabinet. In fact he was better known in Europe than his own United States.

We are glad to see a man like Hoover take an interest in the transportation problems and the economic features of the middle west, an inland empire that needs the same freedom of ingress and egress as the east and west and south coasts now so freely enjoy.

THE COMMON-SENSE CURE

KNOWLEDGE multiplies apace, says the St. Cloud Daily Times, but wisdom is still elusive. Nowhere is this truer or clearer than in matters of cure, whether it be of social or economic or physical infirmities. Concerning all these we know infinitely more today than yesterday, and yet must still confess disappointment, since no clear path is opened out of an increasing confusion. The panacea is still a myth, the final authority still lacking, and common agreement on experience has brought with it the widest differences in theory and practice.

One cause for this is that the world is now no less credulous, even though it be vastly better informed. So many things are now possible that we believe all things possible and will run as eagerly after an attractive delusion as ever in the days of superstition. For this reason there is no remedy so absurd but it will have a following, and the energies and enthusiasms of those who would better the world are divided into countless allegiances.

Therefore, in self-defense the average man must discount the optimism of those who preach new cures. Their story has been so often told and has so often lived briefly and surrendered quickly to an equally promising and delusive successor. New knowledge is vastly fertile of new theory, but convincing authority does not yet attend it. We take refuge in the middle ground of common sense from systems that are plausible in their presentation, too comprehensive in their claims and too fervent in their optimism to be trustworthy or true.

GREAT INLAND WATER SYSTEM AIDS FARMER

SECRETARY OF COMMERCE HERBERT HOOVER IN OFFICIAL STATEMENT

SAYS IT WILL ALSO ASSIST TO DEVELOP MIDWEST INDUSTRY

By CARL D. GROAT
(United Press Staff Correspondent)
(Copyright, 1927, by United Press)

Washington, Sept. 28.—Secretary of Commerce Hoover told the United Press yestesday development of a great inland waterway system would aid the farmer and midwest industry.

In an interview, the engineer-statesman outlined, as a basis for stable prosperity to farms and towns of the great central plain, his visioned—and partly accomplished — program for making the Mississippi and its tributaries a great pathway for commerce. Laden steel barges would ply through the Mississippi, linked up with inter-coastal canals, and improved Great Lakes navigation to the ocean via the St. Lawrence.

This development, he said, would "assist the American farmer, though it is not the whole of his problem." He foresaw also that it would check the movement of midwest factories toward the Atlantic seaboard — a presently unfavorable economic situation.

Rail rates, he pointed out, have of necessity swung upwards since the war. But, he declared, the proposed waterway chain would open new transportation avenues at rates comparable to the railroads' pre-war rates, and without damage to the railroads.

By completing the project, American farmers would be able to meet Argentinian and Australian competition at the great price determining markets at Liverpool and the Atlantic seaboard.

At present, Hoover said, American grain because of higher transportation rates than Argentina and Australia pay, is at a disadvantage of from eight to fifteen cents a bushel.

The costs of the project are comparatively small, and could be paid for with the savings in rates over a single year.

"The inland waterways problem," Hoover said, "is divided into four large segments or enterprises, namely:

"The Mississippi system which includes not only the Mississippi proper but also its tributaries.

"The Great Lakes.

"The Great Lakes to the sea.

"Intracoastal canals.

"The government has been working 50 to 100 years on our rivers but there has been in the situation a complete revolution in recent years. Waterway transportation has been shifted from the packet boat carrying 100 to 200 or 300 tons, with a draft of two or three feet to steel barges, carrying from 500 to 2,000 tons, requiring six to nine feet draft.

"Now the Mississippi system, if viewed broadly, becomes a series of trunk lines and a series of lateral lines, with the trunks running from New Orleans to Chicago, and through the lakes clear to Duluth—that is to say, from border to border of the country. Then by completing improvements on the Ohio and Missouri, we have an east and west trunk line stretching 1,600 to 1,700 miles. We have laterals off that, such as the Red river, upper Mississippi, Tennessee, Cumberland and Wabash, and the upper Mississippi to Minneapolis and St. Paul.

"Work on the Mississippi system has been done in segments hitherto. There is now a nine-foot draft at some points but in between there are still the old depths.

"This could be compared to the New York Central system if, with its regular line, it had sections of narrow gauge line in between. We must have a whole system; it can't be in portions. On actual mileage built, the new depths are about 75 per cent complete, but considered on the basis of connections between cities, they are only about 15 per cent complete. It is not a system yet—only a few disconnected segments. Hence it is impossible to get the steel barges put in operation as a transportation system."

Hoover pointed out, however, that the government barge line now operated from St. Louis to New Orleans is moving goods at approximately pre-war railroad rates.

"So it's not entirely a dream; we have a great saving, haven't we?" he interposed.

He then turned to the question of railroad rate increases which he described as acting as a sort of tollgate to all goods going in and out of the west." The average low earnings of railroads as shown by the Interstate commerce commission preclude material reductions of rates, he felt.

"The rate increases," he continued "affect farmers materially. It has been calculated that the increases mean an increase of about 15 to 18 cents in the cost of shipping a bushel of wheat from South Dakota to Liverpool. Competition with American grain comes from Argentina and Australia which have about the same ocean rates as before the war with only little rail increase. This means, for instance, that Argentina has an advantage ranging from eight or nine cents a bushel to 15 cents a bushel over us.

"Now the price of wheat is made where the streams of competition come together, namely, Liverpool or the Atlantic seaboard. Therefore I conclude that the American farmer is getting an eight to 15 cents disadvantage, and this affects the price of all wheat, not simply the export faction.

"We estimate that the farmer would be able to get about pre-war transportation rates if he could get his goods out via the river and the St. Lawrence to the sea. This saving would repay all of the cost of the undertaking in a year if we calculate a lift in the price of grain to the farmer as the reflex of our increase in the export surplus."

Hoover then explained that the rate increases have reacted on the midwest manufacturer, causing him to pay more to get his raw materials in and his finished products out, and resulting in a tendency to hamper midwest industrial development since some of these industrialists are migrating to the seaboard. But its main effect is to stifle growth. This, in turn, reacts on the farmers' market, and there is a "distortion of the whole economic situation of the midwest."

"The only remedy," Hoover continued, "is construction of these waterways."

The St. Lawrence route, he pointed out, is the more direct route to northern Europe. Waterways construction, he said, would not injure the railways. With their business constantly increasing, they will face the problem of larger terminals and facilities, and of purchasing more equipment, but turning to waterways would be a simpler way of relieving the situation, Hoover feels. He pointed out that placing twenty millions of trucks and cars on improved highways had not destroyed the railroads.

Development of intracoastal canals such for instance as is being attempted across Louisiana and Texas to Houston, would further aid in lowering transportation costs, Hoover believes. As for the Great Lakes, he held that it is possible to stabilize their levels—which hitherto have been lowered by drainage and by climatic changes. Shallow channels and harbors increase lake transport costs.

As for the costs of development, Hoover estimated thus: Mississippi system, $120,000,000, for which congress has already begun making annual appropriations; St. Lawrence waterway (after deducting for water power sales) about $140,000,000 divided between Canada and the United States, and perhaps susceptible of further reduction by increasing water-power sales; intracoastal canals, a "couple of millions" a year; stabilization of the Great Lakes—probably about $5,000,000. And all of this would be spread over a period of six to twelve years as construction must move slowly.

"So while the development is of tremendous importance, it would not be a burden to the American taxpayer, and it does not interfere with programs for tax reduction," Hoover said, adding that congress has already authorized the Mississippi system, that intracoastal canals are under construction, and that the Great Lakes stabilization and St. Lawrence waterway development are the subject of negotiations with Canada.

TAKES STAND IN DEFENSE OF HIS WIFE

Georgetown, Texas, Sept. 28.—(UP)—Otis Rogers took the stand this morning in the defense of his wife, Rebecca Bradley Rogers, in her arson trial, and detailed the story of their romance.

"I am proud to say she is my wife," said the young attorney in defending his wife in her first legal tangle and in his first important law case.

Rogers then went on to explain how he had met his wife when she was Miss Bradley attending Fort Worth high school.

"Our acquaintance ripened into friendship," he said, "and this friendship into love. We were married in the court house here at Georgetown on Oct. 28, 1925."

told police there were two men in the automobile from which the shots were fired at him. One of the bullets struck Guilford in the abdomen. His condition today was serious.

Guilford, however, when confronted with the five suspects, declared he recognized the three men as occupants of the gunmen automobile.

Although authorities declared the Jaffa brothers were hired to shoot Guilford, there was no indication who might have ordered him killed.

Guilford made an attack in "The Saturday Press," a new paper he started a week ago, on alleged gambling and vice in Minneapolis. This same issue of the paper carried a prediction by Guilford that he would probably be shot for his expose.

Sam Jaffa is 21 years of age, and twice has been convicted of grand larceny. He was sent to the state training school at Red Wing in 1924, and later returned after violating his probation. In 1926 he was sentenced to serve a year in the Minneapolis workhouse.

JACK DEMPSEY CONFIDENT HE CAN BEST TUNNEY

FORMER CHAMPION IS LOOKING FORWARD TO DRIVE FOR THE TITLE

INTENDS TO KEEP ON FIGHTING FOR ANOTHER SHOT AT THE CHAMPIONSHIP

New York, Sept. 28—(UP)—Jack Dempsey is more confident than ever that he is master of Gene Tunney.

The former champion told newspaper men yesterday at his quarters at the Ambassador Hotel that he is looking forward to a more intensive drive for the title than that which he carried on the past year.

"I have become convinced that you cannot remain out of the ring for three years," he said, "and expect to be as good as ever. I intend to keep fighting from now on because I am looking forward to another shot at the title.

"I never felt better than I do right now. I don't think I fought as well against Tunney as I did against Sharkey, although many people said I looked better. I am satisfied, though, that I knocked Tunney out. When I get him in the ring again I am satisfied that I will knock him out again."

Dempsey denied reports that he had split with Leo Flynn, his manager.

"Everything between me and Flynn is all right," said Dempsey.

Flynn announced that Dempsey has under consideration two offers for fights before the end of the year. The former champion is sought in Cleveland for a bout in October against Johnny Risko and he also is sought in London for a bout in November or December with Phil Scott. A Cleveland promoter has offered Dempsey $150,000 to meet Risko and the English have offered $250,000 for the former champion's services.

Tex Rickard is considering the advisability of trying to arrange a Dempsey bout for Madison Square Garden this winter, possibly against Paulino Uzcudun, the Basque woodchopper.

SEA CAPTAIN TO TURN INTO LAND LUBBER

Nantucket, Mass., Sept. 28.—(UP)—The sea, which recently separated him forever from his beloved sister, has no further charm for Aylward E. Dingle, better known as Captain Dingle, author of sea stories.

He has announced his intention of turning landsman after nearly 40 years of ocean wandering and will spend his remaining days in Nova Scotia.

The sister, Mrs. Mary Manning, was swept to death from the Dingle schooner Gauntlet in Nantucket waters a few weeks ago. Since then the author-adventurer has lost much of his love for the sea that inspired him to spin yarns that thrilled millions.

"That changed things for me," the captain said in discussing the recent tragedy. "I'm all through. I've had enough."

"Not that I'm grieving for Mary. She always wanted to be buried at sea. It is just that the sailing is losing its glamour."

Captain Dingle said he would continue to write about the sea, but that he would live the life of a landsman.

GRAY MATTER COUNTS IN ANY WORLD SERIES

LOOKED UPON IN NATIONAL LEAGUE AS FAST BALL HITTERS

PREDICTION MADE THEY CAN BE CURVED TO DEATH IN SERIES

By HENRY L. FARRELL
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

New York, Sept. 28.—Jack Dempsey's only chance in the Tunney fight depended upon the old sock and as a matter of official record it failed him.

Everyone knew that Dempsey could hit harder than Tunney and it was as generally agreed that Tunney was a better boxer and a smarter strategist than Dempsey. And in this particular instance the brain proved better than the blow.

The same logic that brains are better than might without brains is being applied to the dope on the coming world's series between the New York Yankees and the National League pennant winners.

The hitting power of the Yankees is recognized and respected in the National League but the brain power of the club is disputed.

John McGraw, manager of the New York Giants, has gone on public record with the opinion that the Yankees are not a smart ball club and that they depend entirely upon the old sock. McGraw hasn't expressed any opinion about the coming series but he, as well as some other National League managers, is said to believe that the Pittsburgh Pirates, the St. Louis Cardinals or the Giants could beat the American League champions.

The Yankees are looked upon in the National League as fast ball hitters and the prediction can be heard that they will be curved to death in the series. There are reasons to believe that the Yankees do not favor curve ball pitching but no batters do. It is like the saying that certain boxers do not like it in the body. If the curves are good enough and there are enough of them the Yankees may be curved to death.

National League rooters also argue that Ruth, Gehrig, Meusel and Lazzeri have been stopped cold before in world's series games and that they will do no better this year. The big siege guns certainly were stopped last year when it became necessary for them to be stopped, but the Pirates may not have a stopper like old Alexander.

The Yankees, regardless of the technical arguments being advanced against them, are favorites in the betting. Odds here of seven to five that they win the series are being offered, and some bets have been made at thirteen to ten that they win the first game.

Waite Hoyt, who has been having his best year, is expected to be assigned to pitch the opener for the Yankees and Ray Kremer probably will oppose him if the Pirates win the pennant.

In considering the pitching staff of the Yankees as compared to that of the National League contenders, it must be recalled that the relief strength of the Yankees has been vastly improved by the addition of Wilcey Moore, the best relief pitcher in baseball.

If Pittsburgh wins the National League pennant, the Yankees will leave for Pittsburgh Sunday night and will practice at Forbes Field Monday and Tuesday morning.

Doc Woods, trainer of the club, said today the players all were in the best of condition and that there wasn't a sore arm on the club.

MINIMIZE 'WARFARE' BETWEEN HENRY FORD AND GENERAL MOTORS

Milford, Mich., Sept. 28—(UP)—The much discussed pending "warfare" between Henry Ford and the General Motors Corporation was minimized today in an address delivered by Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., president of General Motors.

Speaking to a group of automobile editors at the corporation's proving grounds here, Sloan said, "the problem does not look so complicated as you newspaper people are trying to make it out to be."

The Ford and General Motors products will be sold at a different price and hence will have different appeals, he said.

"If the past is any indication of the future, the new Ford car will be a car that will appeal to a great mass of people," he said.

"Naturally that car must meet present conditions, but the basic idea is likely to be the same. General Motors is in quite a different position. General Motors idea is to make a car of greater luxury than the Ford—a car that properly belongs to the next higher price class. With every price car there is a definite market. This applies to the Cadillac as well as it does the Ford."

Sloan summed up in the following paragraph:

"There is plenty of opportunity in the world today for Mr. Ford to give the public honest value, which of course he will do, with the result that he will sell an enormous number of cars per year, and there is an equal opportunity for General Motors to give the public honest value at a higher price and likewise sell a very large number of cars per year."

Sloan paid tribute to Ford for his thesis of "the lowest possible price."

"I do not think many of us appreciate the tremendous debt that we owe Mr. Ford not only for his conception of the idea but his sticking to it," he said.

N. P. RY. TO RELOCATE BITTER ROOT BRANCH

St. Paul, Sept. 28.—(UP)—Relocation by the Northern Pacific railroad of its Bitter Root branch, in Montana, will begin at once, officials of the road announced late Tuesday. The relocation process is the second large Montana project undertaken by the Northern Pacific this year, the first being the construction of a 62-mile line from Glendive to Brockway, at a cost of $3,000,000.

Assurance has been given by the Amalgamated Sugar Co., of Utah, that it would build a $1,500,000 sugar beet plant at Missoula. The new Bitter Root line will tap one of the largest areas in Montana suitable for sugar beet growing.

PIRATES NOW TWO GAMES IN THE LEAD

CARDINALS ONLY FACE REMOTE CHANCE TO WIN THE PENNANT

PITTSBURGH MADE POSITION MORE SECURE BY BEATING CUBS 2 TO 1

(By United Press

With three games remaining to be played, the Cardinals today had a remote chance to win the National League pennant from Pittsburgh, now two games in the lead. If the Pirates win two of three games from Cincinnati while the Cards win all of their games, Pittsburgh will still be winner. New York can tie for the lead by winning all of their four games, provided the Pirates lose all three. The standing:

Pittsburgh	93	58	.616
St. Louis	91	60	.603
New York	89	61	.593

The Pirates made their position more secure by beating the Cubs 2 to 1, the third game of a four-game series they have won by a one-run margin. Carlson, Cubs pitcher, allowed Traynor to single in the fifth and Grantham followed with a home run. That was the extent of the Pirate scoring. Meadows, Hill and Kremer held the Cubs to five hits.

Three hits were all the Reds could get off Grover Alexander and the Cardinals kept pace with the Pirates by winning 4 to 1. Frisch stole two bases for the Cardinals, making his total for the season 49. Donohue was the losing pitcher.

Jack Scott yielded five hits and three runs to the Giants' bats in the second inning and lost the game for Philadelphia. The score was 6 to 2. Fitzsimmons allowed seven hits.

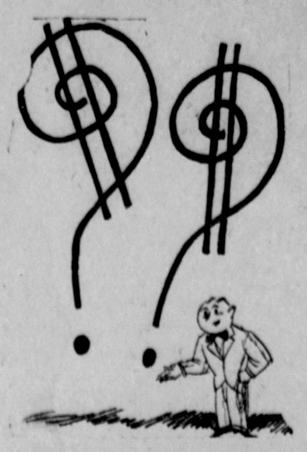

Babe Ruth camewithin two of his 1921 record when he hit his 57th home run of the season in yesterday's game with the Athletics. The score in favor of the Yankees was 7 to 4. Philadelphia used five pitchers and New York used two.

THREE OF FIVE MEN TAKEN IDENTIFIED BY GUILFORD

Minneapolis, Minn., Sept. 28—(UP)—Three of five men under arrest here today were identified by Howard Guilford, editor of a weekly newspaper as the occupants of an automobile from which four shots were fired at him Monday. Guilford identified the men from his bed at a hospital.

They are, "Irish" Gottef, address unknown, and Sam and Harry Jaffa, brothers, Minneapolis. Two other suspects held for questioning, but unidentified by Guilford as his assailants are Frank Adams and Louis Golden. They probably will be released today.

When Guilford was shot Monday while on his way to Minneapolis from his home at Robbinsdale, he told police there were two men in the automobile from which the shots were fired at him. One of the bullets struck Guilford in the abdomen. His condition today was serious.

Guilford, however, when confronted with the five suspects, declared he recognized the three men as occupants of the gunmen automobile.

Although authorities declared the Jaffa brothers were hired to shoot Guilford, there was no indication who might have ordered him killed.

Guilford made an attack in "The Saturday Press," a new paper he started a week ago, on alleged gambling and vice in Minneapolis. This same issue of the paper carried a prediction by Guilford that he would probably be shot for his expose.

Sam Jaffa is 21 years of age, and twice has been convicted of grand larceny. He was sent to the state training school at Red Wing in 1924, and later returned after violating his probation. In 1926 he was sentenced to serve a year in the Minneapolis workhouse.

LONE BANDIT ROBS RESTAURANT OF $37

Unmasked Man Enters Garvey's Early Today, Sticks Gun in Face of Waitress

POLICE SEARCH CITY

Bandit Described as Wearing Blue Suit and Grey Cap, Believed a Local Job

A lone bandit, unmasked, held up Garvey's restaurant early this morning and escaped with $37.46 in currency and change from the cash register.

Every policeman on the local force was called out, all trains looked over, highways guarded and nearby towns notified, but no arrests as yet have been made.

The bandit apparently had planned the holdup carefully as he had waited until all customers had left and the night cook had gone down in the basement to attend to the furnace.

Miss Viola Mitchell, night waitress, gave the following account of the holdup:

"About 25 minutes to four a man came in and asked for a package of cigarettes. As I was reaching into the case for the cigarettes, I heard him scuffle between the two counters. When I looked up he had a big shiny gun that looked like a barrel pointed at me. He said 'gimme the money and no monkey business. Don't holler either.' I handed him the money from the cash register and to make sure I gave him all he looked in the cash register but it was practically empty. He scooped up the money and put it in his coat pocket. The man then walked with his back to the door and escaped. He crossed the street and I could see him going north. He wore no mask. His clothing consisted of a grey cap that was pulled down over his eyes, and a blue suit. I could not identify the man. I immediately notified the police and they were here on the job within five minutes."

W. J. Garvey, proprietor of the restaurant stated today that he was certain that the job was done by a local person, as the man had been seen walking across the tracks to the northside.

Police this morning picked up four "strangers" on suspicion but released them when Miss Mitchell was unable to identify any of them as the lone bandit.

The suspects were taken into custody on Oak street. They gave their address as Chicago and stated that they were on the way to their homes after working in the harvest fields. The men slept in a haystack in a field last night.

CHRYSLER MARINE ENGINE

New Entry in Motor Boat Field Scores Remarkable Success Both in Sales and in Performance

What is believed to be a first year record for sales and performance in the motor boat field has been registered by the Chrysler Imperial Marine Engine, which was introduced early in the present summer as the first offering of the newly created Marine Engine Division of the Chrysler Corporation.

Sales of Chrysler motored craft in the first two months following the announcement of the Imperial engine amounted to $500,000, the number of boats built to carry the Chrysler Imperial power plant being four times as many as were produced in this size and style by all other boat builders combined.

Among the well known makes of motor boats in which the Imperial engine has been installed is the Chris-Craft Cadet, the latest product of the Chris Smith & Sons Boat Company, of Algonac, Mich.

The new engine's first season in racing competition has been an impressive series of triumphs.

One of the outstanding victories they have scored was the capture by Miss M. B. (Betty) Carstairs, noted English sportswoman, of the first Atlantic Gold Challenge trophy for standardized runabouts over the famous international course off the Royal Pier at Southampton, England. Miss Carstairs took delivery of the "Sim," a 22-foot Chris-Craft Cadet, only 10 minutes before the first heat was called, and her feat in running the three races of 30 miles with total lap variations of only one minute and 25 seconds under such conditions is regarded by motorboating experts as a remarkable demonstration not only of her skill but also of the reliability and ease of control of the Imperial Marine Engine.

In American waters the first season of the Chrysler engine has been one of unbroken success.

Loyalty to a community is written on the faces of its citizens! Heard from their lips! And shown by their acts!

Travel where you may, you can tell the minute you arrive in a town whether its natives are satisfied with their environment. If you find them smiling—eager to be of service to visitors—well nigh boastful of their town's merits and showing, in every gesture and deed, that they're content with life—you can see instantly that that town is progressive! It's getting somewhere! And its contented citizenry, through unimpeachable loyalty and collective energy, is responsible for it!

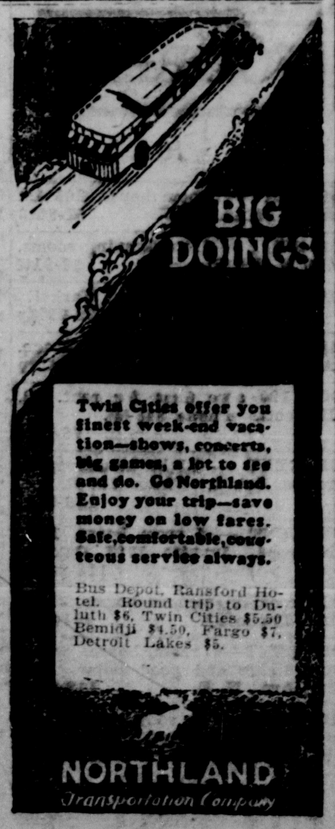

Since the start of our business people's Greater Brainerd campaign, we're glad to see more of that "home town loyalty" spirit prevailing in local circles. It is evident that the campaign has borne some fruit and that Brainerd is well on the way to greater development from which will come the individual reward for each and every one of our citizens. Progress is in the ascendancy and Prosperity prevails!

100 Blue Spruce and 25 Elm Trees Being Planted This Week at Lum Park

RUSTIC BENCHES CONSTRUCTED

Dozen Cottages May be Erected at Tourist Camp Before Next Spring

A program of improvement faces that industrious small body, the Park Board this fall, winter and next spring with the result that many important changes for the better will be noticed at Lum Park, Gregory Park and the Tourist Camp next summer.

One hundred blue spruce are being planted this week at Lum Park to further beautify that spot and 25 elm trees have been planted on the south side of the boulevard at the park. The old band stand has been taken down, and the entire grounds given a thorough cleaning. More rustic seats are being constructed for distribution throughout the park and the new addition. The board next spring contemplates the purchase of additional amusement devices which will include water wheels.

At Gregory Park workmen have already relevelled the walks and are putting in new cinder walks. It is proposed to erect a top for the band stand in order to allow the bands to play there, protected from rain.

While the Brainerd Tourist Camp is already considered one of the finest camps in the country, it will be made even more attractive through the improvements planned there. It is the intention of the members interested in the camp to construct a dozen cottages by the opening of next spring. The three cottages now in use at the camp has been in use continually this season. Six new camp tables outfitted with gas plates have been added to the 25 already installed. A new toilet and shower bath is included in the proposed work. It is also the intention to move the office building to the main entrance of the grounds.

Stanley Sandberg Left Last Evening for Great Lakes Naval Training Station

Desiring to embark upon the sea of adventure and at the same time acquire a knowledge of a trade or profession, Stanley William Sandberg, son of 513 Third Ave. N. E., a former Brainerd high school student, yesterday was accepted for enlistment in the U. S. Navy; leaving last night for the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, at which place he will be stationed for two months preparatory training in the subjects most essential in the routine of Navy life.

"In the Navy, Stanley will have a better chance of realizing his ambitions for there is a great number of different lines and trades concentrated in a small space. He will have a chance to look them all over and decide on the one that seems to offer the most opportunities and which is preferable. He may have to wait for a time to break into the trade that he likes best or he may have to take up an allied work. At any rate he has a better chance of picking congenial work, with outside activities to keep his mind and body active. The local navy recruiting office located at the post office will be glad to explain the opportunities of the Navy to any other young men interested," stated C. B. M. Kelly, recruiting officer.

DENUNCIATION OF BEAUTY CONTESTS

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CATHOLIC WOMEN TERM THEM "DETRIMENTAL TO WELFARE"

Washington, Sept. 28.—(UP) — Denunciation of beauty contests and bathing beauty pageants as "detrimental to girls' welfare" will come up for a vote today at the convention of the National Council of Catholic Women.

Such a resolution was drafted on Monday and approved unanimously by 100 delegates, including Mrs. John A. MacMahon, Chicago, first vice-president; Mrs. George V. McIntyre, Chicago, president of the "Big Sisters" Association, and Miss Sarah E. Laughlin, Philadelphia international chairman of the bureau of girls' welfare.

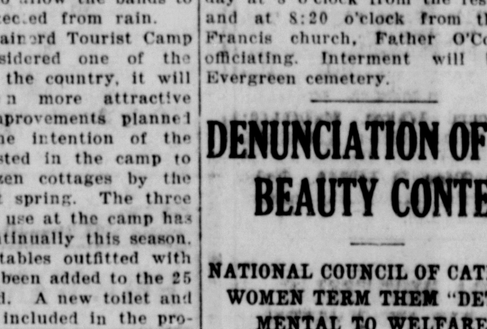

"Beauty pageants like those held annually at Atlantic City are steps backward in the progress of civilization," declared Mrs. MacMahon.

"They are a menace to the morals of the nation," said Mrs. McIntyre.

"I am fond of beauty," asserted Miss Laughlin, "but I draw the line at placing a young American girl on the block and judging her by points as one would judge a pure-bred animal."

Miss Laughlin said one national beauty winner, "forced into the contest by her parents, accepted a theatrical contract, spent all she had earned and now is working in a shop at $25 a week or less." The girl's mother enjoyed a luxurious wardrobe for a year and the father quit work to bask in sudden fame," she added.

"In the end, none of the three was benefitted."

Miss Carrie Morrison has returned from her eastern trip where she had been buying the fall and winter stock for the Grandelmyer millinery establishment. She visited Chicago, New York and some of the other large eastern market points.

W. D. McKay, agent for the Northern Pacific, in this city has tendered his resignation to Supt. Vanderslice, of the Superior division, the same to take effect October 15. Mr. McKay gave as a reason for his action that he is desirous of devoting his entire time to his private business, which he claims has been allowed to take care of itself largely during the past few years.

Mayor Halsted and son, and Miss Flo Halsted, returned from Virginia yesterday afternoon where they have been visiting for a short time.

This morning J. E. Caron and Miss Anna Lafiame, were united in marriage at St. Francis church. Both young people live in the city and are well known on the south side.

Miss Carrie Morrison has returned from her eastern trip where she had been buying the fall and winter stock for the Grandelmyer millinery establishment. She visited Chicago, New York and some of the other large eastern market points.

W. D. McKay, agent for the Northern Pacific, in this city has tendered his resignation to Supt. Vanderslice, of the Superior division, the same to take effect October 15. Mr. McKay gave as a reason for his action that he is desirous of devoting his entire time to his private business, which he claims has been allowed to take care of itself largely during the past few years.

Mayor Halsted and son, and Miss Flo Halsted, returned from Virginia yesterday afternoon where they have been visiting for a short time.

This morning J. E. Caron and Miss Anna Lafiame, were united in marriage at St. Francis church. Both young people live in the city and are well known on the south side.

SYNOPSIS

Emmett Murtough, a roistering young man of Killanmaul, a village on the west coast of Ireland near Knockbotherum, hears the call of America. He is in love with Sheila Kildare, daughter of Old Tom Kildare, who let his farm go to ruin while he "talked politics." Both Emmett and Sheila visit the Knockbotherum Fair and have their fortunes told by Mother O'Reilly who has long been famous for her prophecies.

CHAPTER I—Continued

Mother O'Reilly turned to the shelf behind her where good luck trinkets were kept. From amongst the lot she selected a locket and held it out to Sheila. It was round, rimmed with a silver band and transparent. Between two thin circles of glass was a shamrock, the four petals flatly pressed.

"'Tis good luck, darling, an' Mother O'Reilly herself promises ye it will bring ye happiness. Wear it always, darling, an' never lose it, for if you do the imps, bad cess to them, will be climbing ye'r back to make trouble for ye."

Sheila held it close to her breast, her eyes shining. "I'll never, never lose it," she cried in perfect faith.

"An', acushla, now; just a shilling; not for the charm," the old fortune teller hastily added, "but because charms are no good to one unless there's a bit of silver passes the palms, as ye well know."

Sheila opened her purse and placed the shilling in the old woman's hand. She felt a sudden grip upon her shoulder and she was dragged to her feet.

"An' what are ye doing here? Flinging my good money away on charms an' fortune telling? Bad cess to ye, girl! Is it rich we are to be having dealings with such old frauds as this?"

"Father, don't, ye hurt me!"

"Hurt ye I will," Old Tom, hot with liquor, roared angrily. "What's that ye have? A locket! An' what will ye be doing with a locket? Give the old woman back her trinket an' get back ye'r money."

"Father, it's good luck; it's a shamrock an' I must keep it always."

"Give it back, I say!"

"No, no!" Sheila wrested herself from the old man's grasp and with a quick gesture dropped the precious charm into her bodice. Defeated for the moment, Old Tom Kildare ordered her home and Sheila took his arm to guide his stumbling footsteps while he grumbled and scolded her for her extravagance.

"An' did ye sell the pig, father?" she asked.

"I did, indeed," he boasted proudly. "An' at a fine price."

"An' where's the money," Sheila insisted.

"What should I be answering questions concerning my money to you, ye spendthrift," he retorted. Sheila sighed. The money was gone she well knew. Old Tom was ever loose handed in a tavern when there were plenty of shillings in his pocket. And, perhaps a bet or two on the races had taken a share. The money was to have purchased the seedlings for the potato patch. Now they must wait and perhaps miss the best season for planting.

Old Tom reeled along and Sheila hung her head in shame, for there were many there at the Knockbotherum Fair from Killanmaul way and the gossips would be busy about Tom Kildare and his daughter tomorrow. As tears filled her pretty eyes Sheila touched the precious locket hidden near her breast and murmured to herself:

"I have the singing heart and nothing can ever hurt me now!"

CHAPTER TWO.

Off For America!

The fair at Knockbotherum was a fortnight away and the Murtough was in his element. He had made his peace with Peter Harrigan, his maternal uncle and had won him over not only to the great adventure across the sea but had actually argued the old man, who was known throughout the Killanmaul country as a miserly one, into providing passage money to New York. The villagers were not particularly impressed with this, however. They did not attribute the gift so much to Emmett's powers of persuasion.

"A lucky man is Peter," they said in the Widow O'Farrell's Inn. "Sure an' the boy would amount to nothin' at all, at all, here in Killanmaul; save to get hisself mixed up with too many girls for his own good. An' who can tell but that it might cost the old Harrigan a penny or two."

But Emmett gave no heed to these wiseacres who knew too much. Indeed, he walked on feathers, as the saying is, and his chin pointed high as he boasted to his comrades of what he would do in America and the riches that would be his. Listeners were few, however, for the Murtough was none too popular with the fellows of his own age; he was too much of a ladies' man to be taken seriously by those young stalwarts who braved the sea or who bent their backs over flourishing farms. Sheila Kildare was his best audience. For Sheila dreamed, too, and while she loved Killanmaul, and her love for it never was to end until her last breath, still her fresh imagination plucked from the boastfulness of Emmett a hope near to her own heart.

"Sheila, darling, it's a great man I'll be over there, where every fellow has his chance an' there are none to scoff an' scorn the whole day through. Who could do anything at all here in Killanmaul; the dirty little village! An' with these people who look at ye as if ye were as familiar as the horse an' gig of Doctor Carmody, an' no more. Just because they have seen ye about since the time ye was a small scut they think ye'll amount to nothing at all, at all. Why, down in Knockbotherum didn't they tell me about Tim O'Malley who went from there a dozen years ago an' now he's on the police force in New York an' he wears a uniform an' gets a tremendous salary every month. It's a politician he is, too."

"Oh, Emmett, I do hope everything turns out well," Sheila cried wistfully. "But it's such a long ways over there; miles an' miles across the water, an' everybody'll be a stranger to ye!"

"Old Mother O'Reilly told me I'd do well among strangers," and then Emmett remembered the admonishment of the fortune teller. "An', Sheila, she said I should have a wife to hold me down an' to help make me successful."

"Emmett!"

"I'd be asking ye to go with me now, Sheila, darling, but I want to get started an' to have something to bring ye to when the time comes. An' will ye wait for me?"

"An' how will I be knowing ye want me," Sheila answered. There was no coquetry in her voice. The girl looked on life gravely in spite of her joyous spirit, and the soil of the Killanmaul country gripped her through the generations of forefathers who had passed their lives there.

"Ah, Sheila, ye know I've been wanting ye all these years," Emmett insisted.

"Aye, but ye played fast and loose with many a girl, I've heard."

"Well, I've done me bit of philandering," the Murtough admitted, and not without pride.

"I'm wondering if I had been as easy as the other girls if ye would have asked me to have the ring."

"Sure, now, Sheila, if a man stops by the roadside come night to chin with a broth of a girl is he the worst for it?"

MARY BRIAN AND RALPH FORBES IN THE PARAMOUNT PICTURE "BEAU GESTE" A HERBERT BRENON PRODUCTION

Thousands of Players Spent Three Months in Desert Camp

The screen version of one of the most popular romantic action novels in recent years, "Beau Geste," will make its first appearance today at the Lyceum.

This thrilling story of romance, mystery and adventure in the French Foreign Legion with the theme of the devotion of three brothers powerfully depicted, has been transferred to the screen by Paramount on a scale never surpassed by any previous production.

For the filming of this novel, Director Herbert Brenon led an army of 2,000 men into the Great American Desert for three months during which the exterior scenes were made.

Ronald Colman plays the title part, that of the eldest of three brothers who each leave home without telling the others, to enlist in the French Foreign Legion under assumed names in order to shield each other from the blame for the theft of a famous sapphire. Neil Hamilton and Ralph Forbes enact the other brothers.

HEDDA HOYT TELLS ABOUT MEN AND MAKEUPS

By HEDDA HOYT

New York, Sept. 28.—(UP)—A man may relish a rouge-smeared mouth but a cold creamed eyelid ruins his appetite for romance!

Cold cream has been the blight of many a happy romance. The business of keeping beautiful is a losing one unless carried on in private. All men like to come home to a well-kept, clean home but the male is rare who likes to be around when the lemon oil is being applied. Men admire wives who resort to artifical means of beauty, whether they are aware of the artificiality or not, but they don't like to see women applying the grease-paint. Faces in the cocoon stage have no attraction for them.

The clever woman conceals her weapons. Cosmetics are listed among the most poignant of feminine weapons in this day and age. Romance, with women is of stronger stuff. A man can wield a shaving stick over his face producing a Santa Claus effect without driving his wife into hysterics. She'll remove the soap-soaked whiskers which he parked on her vanity case without turning a hair. Man, on the other hand, wants to see the reconditioned article at all times. A mascaro-ed teardrop fills him with dismay.

A man will grow a two-week's beard for the fun of it. But if his wife's bob starts neckward he'll hie her to the barber. He feels that he can get on an old army shirt, a pair of grimmy fishing trousers and an old fedora and start out on a vacation. But, friend wife, must have on proper sporting clothes. No old calico for hers!

It may be well enough to hold a man's love by culinary art. Facts prove, however, that the woman who keeps him blindfolded to her artificiality does a better job of holding. A kiss from a rouged mouth is better if one hasn't seen the applying of the lip-stick. A cold-creamed pillow may dispel crows' feet, but it is a knock-out blow to marital bliss.

Conversion Not Easy

All conversions are not in religion. Many of us have to be converted to new and better thoughts and ways. Ofttimes these conversions are the hardest kind to make.

Japanese Proverb

Buy land that slopes toward the center, and marry a girl whose mother is good.

"IRISH HEARTS," with May McAvoy, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Emmett Murtough, a roistering young man of Killanmaul, a village on the west coast of Ireland near Knockbotherum, hears the call of America. He is in love with Sheila Kildare, daughter of Old Tom Kildare, who let his farm go to ruin while he "talked politics." Both Emmett and Sheila visit the Knockbotherum Fair and have their fortunes told by Mother O'Reilly who has long been famous for her prophecies.

Mother O'Reilly turned to the shelf behind her where good luck trinkets were kept. From amongst the lot she selected a locket and held it out to Sheila. It was round, rimmed with a silver band and transparent. Between two thin circles of glass was a shamrock, the four petals flatly pressed.

"'Tis good luck, darling, an' Mother O'Reilly herself promises ye it will bring ye happiness. Wear it always, darling, an' never lose it, for if you do the imps, bad cess to them, will be climbing ye'r back to make trouble for ye."

Sheila held it close to her breast, her eyes shining. "I'll never, never lose it," she cried in perfect faith.

"An', acushla, now; just a shilling; not for the charm," the old fortune teller hastily added, "but because charms are no good to one unless there's a bit of silver passes the palms, as ye well know."

Sheila opened her purse and placed the shilling in the old woman's hand. She felt a sudden grip upon her shoulder and she was dragged to her feet.

"An' what are ye doing here? Flinging my good money away on charms an' fortune telling? Bad cess to ye, girl! Is it rich we are to be having dealings with such old frauds as this?"

"Father, don't, ye hurt me!"

"Hurt ye I will," Old Tom, hot with liquor, roared angrily. "What's that ye have? A locket! An' what will ye be doing with a locket? Give the old woman back her trinket an' get back ye'r money."

"Father, it's good luck; it's a shamrock an' I must keep it always."

"Give it back, I say!"

"No, no!" Sheila wrested herself from the old man's grasp and with a quick gesture dropped the precious charm into her bodice. Defeated for the moment, Old Tom Kildare ordered her home and Sheila took his arm to guide his stumbling footsteps while he grumbled and scolded her for her extravagance.

"An' did ye sell the pig, father?" she asked.

"I did, indeed," he boasted proudly. "An' at a fine price."

"An' where's the money," Sheila insisted.

"What should I be answering questions concerning my money to you, ye spendthrift," he retorted. Sheila sighed. The money was gone she well knew. Old Tom was ever loose handed in a tavern when there were plenty of shillings in his pocket. And, perhaps a bet or two on the races had taken a share. The money was to have purchased the seedlings for the potato patch. Now they must wait and perhaps miss the best season for planting.

Old Tom reeled along and Sheila hung her head in shame, for there were many there at the Knockbotherum Fair from Killanmaul way and the gossips would be busy about Tom Kildare and his daughter tomorrow. As tears filled her pretty eyes Sheila touched the precious locket hidden near her breast and murmured to herself:

"I have the singing heart and nothing can ever hurt me now!"

CHAPTER TWO.
Off For America!

The fair at Knockbotherum was a fortnight away and the Murtough was in his element. He had made his peace with Peter Harrigan, his maternal uncle and had won him over not only to the great adventure across the sea but had actually argued the old man, who was known throughout the Killanmaul country as a miserly one, into providing passage money to New York. The villagers were not particularly impressed with this, however. They did not attribute the gift so much to Emmett's powers of persuasion.

"A lucky man is Peter," they said in the Widow O'Farrell's Inn. "Sure an' the boy would amount to nothin' at all, at all, here in Killanmaul; save to get hisself mixed up with too many girls for his own good. An' who can tell but that it might cost the old Harrigan a penny or two."

But Emmett gave no heed to these wiseacres who knew too much. Indeed, he walked on feathers, as the saying is, and his chin pointed high as he boasted to his comrades of what he would do in America and the riches that would be his. Listeners were few, however, for the Murtough was none too popular with the fellows of his own age; he was too much of a ladies' man to be taken seriously by those young stalwarts who braved the sea or who bent their backs over flourishing farms. Sheila Kildare was his best audience. For Sheila dreamed, too, and while she loved Killanmaul, and her love for it never was to end until her last breath, still her fresh imagination plucked from the boastfulness of Emmett a hope near to her own heart.

"Sheila, darling, it's a great man I'll be over there, where every fellow has his chance an' there are none to scoff an' scorn the whole day through. Who could do anything at all here in Killanmaul; the dirty little village! An' with these people who look at ye as if ye were as familiar as the horse an' gig of Doctor Carmody, an' no more. Just because they have seen ye about since the time ye was a small scut they think ye'll amount to nothing at all, at all. Why, down in Knockbotherum didn't they tell me about Tim O'Malley who went from there a dozen years ago an' now he's on the police force in New York an' he wears a uniform an' gets a tremendous salary every month. It's a politician he is, too."

"Oh, Emmett, I do hope everything turns out well," Sheila cried wistfully. "But it's such a long ways over there; miles an' miles across the water, an' everybody'll be a stranger to ye!"

"Old Mother O'Reilly told me I'd do well among strangers," and then Emmett remembered the admonishment of the fortune teller. "An', Sheila, she said I should have a wife to hold me down an' to help make me successful."

"Emmett!"

"I'd be asking ye to go with me now, Sheila, darling, but I want to get started an' to have something to bring ye to when the time comes. An' will ye wait for me?"

"An' how will I be knowing ye want me," Sheila answered. There was no coquetry in her voice. The girl looked on life gravely in spite of her joyous spirit, and the soil of the Killanmaul country gripped her through the generations of forefathers who had passed their lives there.

"Ah, Sheila, ye know I've been wanting ye all these years," Emmett insisted.

"Aye, but ye played fast and loose with many a girl, I've heard."

"Well, I've done me bit of philandering," the Murtough admitted, and not without pride.

"I'm wondering if I had been as easy as the other girls if ye would have asked me to have the ring."

"Sure, now, Sheila, if a man stops by the roadside come night to chin with a broth of a girl is he the worst for it?"

MARY BRIAN AND RALPH FORBES IN THE PARAMOUNT PICTURE "BEAU GESTE" A HERBERT BRENON PRODUCTION

Thousands of Players Spent Three Months in Desert Camp

The screen version of one of the most popular romantic action novels in recent years, "Beau Geste," will make its first appearance today at the Lyceum.

This thrilling story of romance, mystery and adventure in the French Foreign Legion with the theme of the devotion of three brothers powerfully depicted, has been transferred to the screen by Paramount on a scale never surpassed by any previous production.

For the filming of this novel, Director Herbert Brenon led an army of 2,000 men into the Great American Desert for three months during which the exterior scenes were made.

Ronald Colman plays the title part, that of the eldest of three brothers who each leave home without telling the others, to enlist in the French Foreign Legion under assumed names in order to shield each other from the blame for the theft of a famous sapphire. Neil Hamilton and Ralph Forbes enact the other brothers.

HEDDA HOYT TELLS ABOUT MEN AND MAKEUPS

By HEDDA HOYT

New York, Sept. 28.—(UP)—A man may relish a rouge-smeared mouth but a cold creamed eyelid ruins his appetite for romance!

Cold cream has been the blight of many a happy romance. The business of keeping beautiful is a losing one unless carried on in private. All men like to come home to a well-kept, clean home but the male is rare who likes to be around when the lemon oil is being applied. Men admire wives who resort to artifical means of beauty, whether they are aware of the artificiality or not, but they don't like to see women applying the grease-paint. Faces in the cocoon stage have no attraction for them.

The clever woman conceals her weapons. Cosmetics are listed among the most poignant of feminine weapons in this day and age. Romance, with women is of stronger stuff. A man can wield a shaving stick over his face producing a Santa Claus effect without driving his wife into hysterics. She'll remove the soap-soaked whiskers which he parked on her vanity case without turning a hair. Man, on the other hand, wants to see the reconditioned article at all times. A mascaro-ed teardrop fills him with dismay.

A man will grow a two-week's beard for the fun of it. But if his wife's bob starts neckward he'll hie her to the barber. He feels that he can get on an old army shirt, a pair of grimmy fishing trousers and an old fedora and start out on a vacation. But, friend wife, must have on proper sporting clothes. No old calico for hers!

It may be well enough to hold a man's love by culinary art. Facts prove, however, that the woman who keeps him blindfolded to her artificiality does a better job of holding. A kiss from a rouged mouth is better if one hasn't seen the applying of the lip-stick. A cold-creamed pillow may dispel crows' feet, but it is a knock-out blow to marital bliss.

Conversion Not Easy

All conversions are not in religion. Many of us have to be converted to new and better thoughts and ways. Ofttimes these conversions are the hardest kind to make.

Japanese Proverb

Buy land that slopes toward the center, and marry a girl whose mother is good.
